The Gramercy Hotel SRO Awaits Its Fate As the Demolition Date Nears for Site 'B'

By Dusan Walsh

New York, April 23 — A small group of tenants at the Gramercy Hotel on Lexington Avenue and 24th Street charge that plans for construction of Baruch College's Site 'B' will "move people out of New York," according to Jim Davis, one of the more outspoken tenants in the building.

The tenants charge that the Dormitory Authority (DA) promised to build new low-income housing in the area, although the tenants did not believe that would happen. They did believe that they would be assisted in finding "equal or better housing in the community," says Jim Davis. The state has offered $7500 to each tenant to relocate. Davis claims that the offer is inadequate because of the higher rents that would be demanded by the new housing.

Residents of the Hotel Gramercy Refuse to Accept Relocation Plans; Will Fight Dormitory Authority Through Series of Court Appeals

By Eric Thorne

NEW YORK, April 22— Enter ing through the green tiled archway of 137 East 24th Street, one opens the heavy silver door to a lobby filled with history. A dusty smell clings to the air and a feeling of the past comes alive. Among the faded green walls, which hang dusty 20th century works of art, many personalities have passed by the weathered, oak front desk of the Gramercy Hotel.

The Gramercy has given hope to writers and musicians alike, providing inexpensive housing for almost a century. With a brick facade that contains the outline of a once prominent hotel name, the seven-story building has not only created history, but has become history. But as the demolition date nears, the once timeless site will be nothing more than a memory in the minds of about one hundred years worth of tenants.

of the selection process by approaching Committee members without building the various student governments first. "We misrepresent the student body by putting two night students on the Committee," Heller maintained. Colin J. is, in fact, a night student who "looked for any comments. He claimed that he "did not feel threatened in any manner for having petitioned the Committee, and we will make our voices heard strongly to the President, who did not get any signatures, but who has become somewhat like a 'white hunter' in this process," he added. Those tenants who "have been seen such people like writer Murray (who) take up a room, will no longer. Instead, the little brick Building on the northeast corner of Lexington Ave will be replaced by a modern, student-oriented complex.

I don't want Baruch to be the bad guy," said Dave, "It's the Democracy Fund that's the bad guy."

The Baruch College Early Learning Center at the second floor of 110 East 19 Street currently serves 38 students in two classes. Besides one administrative director and an assistant, the faculty employs four full-time and two part-time teachers. It faces a reduction of 25% in the $88,000 federal grant of its operating budget for nearly $350,000 and also faces a rocky future in the state budget cut and the college reorganization committee as well.

It's Your Move

Are you a Baruch student dissatisfied with the present state of affairs regarding student issues? Do you feel that there is nothing you can do to change the situation? If your answer to these questions is YES, then you ought to know that your influence regarding the affairs that affect you directly as a student is greater than you think.

We encourage your participation on the upcoming Student Government Election, which will take place May 6-10.

Don't forsake your opportunity to let your voice be heard regarding your future at Baruch!

Must We Be All the World’s Healthcare Provider?

By Joseph M. Mahdawi

Gabriela Salinas is a seven-year-old girl from Bolivia who suffers from Ewing’s Sarcoma, a type of bone cancer. She needs chemotherapy, but her parents cannot afford it. Her mother, Gabriela, was a teacher, and her father, an associate professor, who is from New York. Her parents were flying back to Bolivia from New York when they were kidnapped in Bolivia by the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Peru (FAROEP), a terrorist group. The parents were relying on Americans to foot the bill for their child’s treatment. Mount Sinai said they would not pay either. What is upsetting is that the parents were relying on the public through the media, and that the story was not allowed to happen.

A Plea To Members of the Retrenchment Committee

By Cecilia McCall

Once again government policy as it relates to higher education is short-sighted. Governor Pataki continues to push for the downsizing of the public sector, including the cancellation of public assistance programs. He has always been accused of a “take and spend policy,” the Republican policy can be described as “slash and burn.”

Since 1994, the university has been asked to respond to one financial crisis after another. Then faculty were reduced, until faculty will be ﬁred. Then tuition was imposed for the ﬁrst time, today students are leaving because they can no longer afford CUNY. Faculty were retrenched, today faculty will be fired. CUNY Perspectives 1996 continues to be a defining year for America and much of the world. It is understandable that our society identify issues from foreign to 36 Russian relations to the welfare state may depend on economic issues. The United States has always been accused of a “tax and spend” policy.

Part I: Deregulation of the Communications Industry

AT&T's New Competitive Strategy

By Pamela Ebenso

The monopolization of industry and the spread of favored monies contracts increased the downward stickiness of monetary prices, which increased integration of national economic trade patterns into a single, price-competitive exchange system. The Bretton Woods agreement set up a complex system of rules and standards to provide a balance-of-payments mechanism in the Bretton Woods system, which placed fixed exchange rates to be adhered to in the international community. The International Monetary Fund, to administer a complex system of rules and standards to provide a balance-of-payments mechanism in the Bretton Woods system, which placed fixed exchange rates to be adhered to in the international community. Part II: Should The Gold Standard Be Revived?

A close-up look at U.S. currency policies

By Kathleen O'Connor

After the end of World War II, the gold standard was abandoned, and Bretton Woods was restored to its prewar status. The new gold standard was caused by the United States' desire to stabilize its currency and ensure convertibility of international dollars. This system was considered a more stable and reliable system than the previous gold standard.

More recently, the gold standard has been discussed as a possible solution to the current volatility of the dollar. However, the convertibility guarantee, which the Bank of England and other central banks were responsible for, was not adhered to. This lack of adherence to the convertibility guarantee was a significant factor in the breakdown of the gold standard.

Bell Atlantic & NYNEX

Announce Plans to Merge

By Ron Cox

The merger deal that has been heavily rumored in recent months finally became reality. On April 22, Bell Atlantic and NYNEX announced that directors of both companies had unanimously approved an agreement that will create a company valued in excess of $50 billion.

"This will serve the world's best communications marketplace," Bell Atlantic Chairman Robert Allen said. "This is restructuring in the telecommunications industry, and we are very pleased with the results." The companies are expected to close the merger in the next six months.

The new company, which will be known as Bell Atlantic-NYNEX, will be headquartered in New York City, and will retain significant operations in Boston, Philadelphia, and Arlington, VA.

The Unfailing and Uncertain Industry: With the shifty PC demand, semiconductor's leading indicator plunged to a new low

By Wei Yang

Profit taking in the technology sector has been a popular theme in recent years, as indicated by the recent surge in the tech sector. This trend has benefited Intel Corporation, the dominant semiconductor supplier. Furthermore, with the push for personal computers, the semiconductor industry has seen a significant increase in demand. However, the industry has also been hit by the downturn in the economy, leading to a decrease in demand for computer components.

In February, Intel reported that its fourth quarter net income was down 49%. The company attributed the decline to a decrease in sales of its microprocessors and a decrease in the average selling price of its chips. Intel also announced that it would be cutting its workforce by 9,000 employees.

On April 19, the Columbus, Ohio-based CompuServe Inc., the major consumer online service, announced that its first quarter net income fell 29%.

The company, which is known for its tax-free spin-off or split-off in the computer service and Internet service industry, America Online, is seeking to establish an independent identity. The company, founded by H&R. Block via a tax-free spin-off, has recently announced that it will generate digital signal processing used in radio and audio products. This shows that Texas Instruments is still expecting growth in the world-wide sale of microprocessors.

The company, founded by Richard H. Brown, said that the move was made to facilitate the separation of the company into two separate entities. The CEO, Richard H. Brown said: "We believe that by separating the companies, it will allow each firm to become more attractive to the market." However, the move is not expected to have a significant impact on the company's performance in the near term.

Conclusion

The semiconductor industry is facing significant challenges in the current economic environment. The demand for personal computers and other electronic devices is slowing, leading to decreased demand for semiconductor components. The companies are facing increased competition and need to focus on developing new technologies to maintain their market share.

When it comes to the Future

There's no time like the Present.

Professor Jayana Clerk

New Environmental Studies Program

The Department of Natural Sciences is initiating an interdisciplinary ad hoc Major in Environmental Studies. This major is designed to fulfill the needs of students who are interested in environmental science from a "business" or "economic" perspective. The Liberal Arts ad hoc major with specialization in Environmental Studies will be applied science and will integrate ecological principles in a socio-physiological context. Graduates of this liberal curriculum could: 1) compete for careers in government, industry, and business; 2) continue the environmental science major and enter graduate or professional school; or 3) enter into a graduate-level mission oriented field of study in environmental law (e.g. J.D.) or business (M.B.A. or M.P.A.).

Students interested are urged to contact the Department of Natural Sciences at (212) 387-1230 and request a conference with a faculty advisor or contact Professor Miguel Santos, who is located at the Department of Natural Sciences, Room 1852 on the 18th Street Building.

Jayana Clerk, Super-Professor

By Marcel A. Silva

First day of classes. The chairs in the classroom are one attached to another and aligned askew. This classroom is packed. A woman about five feet tall wearing a conservative dark green dress waves into class holding a book as thick as the Bible.

As she gets to the table, she puts the book down as if it was a light and fragile newborn. She raises her head and shows a candid smile.

Hello, I'm Professor Jayana Clerk. Let's break down the way the chairs are arranged and put them in a circle so we can interact with each other more.

The class was surprised, or ashamed, as she started to move around, helping them with the chairs. They realize that so far, Professor Clerk's conservative look totally differs from the way she interacts with them.

Professor Clerk tells students that Third World Literature, or non-Western Literature, is physically and financially hard course to study. It's impossible to buy and buy literature books from different countries for a single person. They are a hard course to study. And we contend, like Carlos Fuentes, that "Literature is not of linear progression, but of circles and simultaneity, capable of meeting the cyclical contributions of our total humanity." All of us, from the East or the West, need to open our perceptions outward, understanding the limitations of our own visions of reality since we are all too often trapped within the specific modes of our perceptions.

"The book's title: Modern Literature of the Non-Western World. Where the Waters are Born, by Jayana Clerk and Ruth Siegel. Students stare at each other as if looking for an answer when they read the book's author. "Yes, we read it," asks a student. "Yes," answers Professor Clerk, changing the conversation's topic. "The book is just to give you a better understanding about non-Western literature," she adds.

But once one reads the book's preface, it becomes clear that Professor Clerk's book is more than what she told her students. We see our book as a means to transcend ethnocentricity in general and Eurocentricity in particular. And we contend, like Carlos Fuentes, that "Literature is not of linear progression, but of circles and simultaneity, capable of meeting the cyclical contributions of our total humanity." All of us, from the East or the West, need to open our perceptions outward, understanding the limitations of our own visions of reality since we are all too often trapped within the specific modes of our perceptions.

COMPILED BY IRA M. BERSCH

DAVID KINZELBERG, PRESIDENT
ECONOMY PARTY CANDIDATE

My name is David Kinzelberg and I am running for Day Session Student Government President under the Economy Party. I am currently an Upper Councilman for the Day Session student government. I am the Chairman of the Public Relations Committee. My responsibilities range from creating the Day Session Student Government Newsletter to handling the problems and concerns of the students with the suggestions boxes. I also arrange the Freshman Orientation classes so that the Freshman at Baruch College can get involved in school activities.

I am extremely active when it comes to fighting for our rights. I have gone to Albany on numerous occasions to lobby our Assemblymen, Assemblywomen, and Senators. I take pride in participating in rallies backed by the Student Government and clubs.

If elected, I will work as hard as it takes to make our collective voices heard, and will use all of my energy to improve all aspects of student life at Baruch. I am very committed to:

- Building a Democratic Budget Committee
- Restructuring Financial Aid administration
- Improving the Career Services Department
- Strengthening the Asian, Black, and Hispanic Student departments
- Increasing voter registration, voter turn-out, and US Citizenship
- Allowing the elevator problem by increasing time intervals between elevators
- Fighting for a price reduction in the bookstore
- Improving tutorials services
- Improving the Day Care Center

These are items that my fellow students have told me are important to them. I will continue to listen and will be sensitive to any other problems that may develop in the future. It is my hope that I can unite all of the students to work towards common goals and concerns.

I will continue to prove our collective voices to our elected officials. They must be made to understand that we will no longer tolerate increases in tuition and the can relative to classes. I am the one that the students allow me to continue fighting for you in the future. I need nothing more than your backing and your vote.

College: I became fully aware of the whole financial process before dealing with a lot of this situation in the office: I took my budget and the Chair of the Finance Committee. I also decided to join the Campus Affairs Committee where I helped implement and, and make sure quality, balanced reports. As a chair of this important committee, I learned the financial system of the college/organization at Baruch.

The most important function of the Finance Committee is to help clubs and organizations at Baruch make their budgets, and to approve realistic budgets for these budgets. As a chair of this important committee, I learned the financial system of the college/organization at Baruch.

Throughout the year, I ensured that the organization's projects related to parament elections at Baruch. For instance, I was a part of the voter registration campaign, multi-cultural dinner, the joys and clothing drives, career

Tuesday, April 16 was Holocaust Remembrance Day. Over 200 members of the Baruch community stopped by to look at the display of pictures and information about the Holocaust that was set up in the lobby of the Library Building. I would like to thank all of you who took the time to join our community in mourning this tragic set of events. Extra information about the Holocaust is available in the Hillel Office.

Special thanks go out to the following people who helped with the event: Garth D. Chamberlain (finance committee), Alex Kantorovitch (Treasurer), Ira Hersch (Director, Hillel Commuter Center) and everyone who helped with the publicity.

This summer, there are many opportunities for Jewish students to travel in Israel:

Three special 4-week trips for first-time visitors are available for $999 this summer: a trip for students born in the former Soviet Union, an arts and trip, and a freier/volunteer trip. For more information, call Israelbreak at 212-381-6120.

Other Information: The Hillel office has new information on summer internships and academic scholarships for next year. Wednesday, April 24 is Yom Haatzmaut. Israeli Independence Day is a religious holiday. An end of the semester intercollegiate picnic is being planned. Come to Hillel for more details.

LEXIS-NEXIS: THINK AND THEN RESEARCH

By Dimitrie Fatouros with assistance from Prof. Lucinda Steljen

I was thinking the other day to ask: "Why do I always seem to come across the same screen or subject material on which I've focused?" It's a good question to ask, and I believe it is a common question among researchers. The answer is that Lexis/Nexis is a comprehensive information service that provides access to millions of documents, including legal, medical, business, and academic sources. It is designed to help researchers find the information they need quickly and efficiently. The service is available in a number of libraries, including the Baruch College Library.

Briefly, research is conducted as follows: the user enters words relevant to the subject of the research into the search box. These words may include synonyms, related terms, and concepts. The search is then conducted in a number of databases, including newspapers, legal databases, and academic journals. The results are then filtered and refined to provide the most relevant and accurate information.

There are a number of tips that can help improve your research. First, be clear about what you are looking for. This will help you to focus your search and to avoid irrelevant results. Second, use boolean operators (AND, OR, NOT) to refine your search. Third, use wildcards (*) to find variations of a word. Fourth, use quotation marks (""") to find exact phrases. Fifth, use the "Date" field to limit your search to a specific range of dates.

By using these tips, you can improve your research and find the information you need quickly and efficiently. Lexis/Nexis is a powerful tool that can help researchers find the information they need to succeed.

Bittersweet Taste of God Street Wine

Mixed-sweet taste accompanying mixed sounds on "Red." By Anthony Gregory

Springing from the same legendary Nightingales blues bar that gave us Bluebird, Epy, Doctors, and Joan Osborne, comes God Street Wine. While they have all the traits that make a great band for me, such as originality, groove, and melody, GSW's first album for Mercury records entitled "Red," leaves me with mixed feelings.

"Red" References, the band's previous CD for Geffen has a more heaviness to the music that "Red" just doesn't have. The vast majority of songs on "Red" are all done with that southern-blue rock sound, reminiscent of bands like Lynyrd/Skynyrd and The Band. It's not to say that GSW doesn't serve up some of the same on "Red." From the shuffle of "Get on the Train," to the funk-rock of "red real," to "Don't Tell God," GSW doesn't serve up a good time. However, these Sunday at the Baptist church's soul'd out names are thrown against some odd, all-time Knights-riding rap like "Which Way Will The Sun Go," "Top Of Fire," and the shrill "Un- tended Take Two." It's the odd juxtapositions that make it hard to get through the CD. Although there is no musical cohesion to the CD there is a lyrical one. The theme of love, relationships, and sex-popularity you get throughout the album. It could very well be that the abrupt change of gears in the album is symbolic of the ups and downs of relationships. In Faber the lead singer, guitarist, and principal songwriter chronicles his dealing with the world on "Get the Orteh Track," and relationships on "red real," "Which Way Will The Sun Go," and "Girl On Fire." However, all seems to turn for the best in Faber in the end because "Red." The beauty of following Faber throughout his troubled relationships is that the listener gets to sample a wide variety of the sounds and influences that make up GSW's music. Not to mention your get to hear all the super virtuosity of Ron Maxwell on guitar, Dan Pidel on bass, Jon Bevans, percussion, and Tenmos (whose name) on drums. Faber thanks Rob Dylan, whose influence is unmistakable on "Red." The band's dedication to honor its roots might be related to the fact that they are both Brazilian people. Such cross-cultural roots in the music are the key to the success of "Red." The band's fusion of Brazilian, Northeastern beats and native Brazilian songs.

Sepultura Reaffirms Their Brazilian Roots

By Marcelo A. Silva

Soccer, tanga, ranch, and naked people are the image of many people as they hear theRoots" of Sepultura. But in Brazil, for every rule there are many exceptions. So there is Sepultura, Sepultura, a well-established (thrash-metal) band in the U.S. and one formed by Brazilian musicians who sing most of its songs in English and Portuguese. Their genuine Brazilian roots. They have opened concerts for the U.S. top heavy-metal bands like Anthrax and Metallica. Sepultura, which in English means "sun" and "death," has just released their sixth album, "Roots." The album honors Sepultura's Brazilian roots as the band uses their hand's most traditional musical heritage. The band infuses songs with Brazilian, Northeastern beats and native Brazilian songs.

There is a special participation of Brazil's most famous percussion in Carlitos Brown from Bahia's percussion band Odium. Sepultura even uses the Brazilian influence in the song, "Attrition," as Cavateros does a solo with a berimbau, an instrument used for an Afro-Brazilian dance-martial art called capoeira. The album starts and ends with the sound of Brazil's rain forest and its crickets. The striking ending is a bonus track that lasts 15 minutes. The most interesting influence of rhythms are the primitive songs by native Brazilian, Xavantes, who participate in several tracks. In "Brazil," which is a closing ceremony chant. There are an immense amount of heavy-metal bands and its varieties in Brazil that sing in English and Portuguese, but few have a certain difficulty to achieve recognition in their country where most people prefer top commercial stars like Madonna and Michael Jackson as well as Brazil's top commercial bands. The words in the song "Cold," which represents Sepultura as grizzlies due to its greatness. As a matter of fact, a perusal of the names of the albums that they have released so far, "Roots" goes Sepultura a polished facade and gives me a great sense of their excellent credibility with their Brazilian people. Such cross-cultural roots in the music are the key to the success of "Roots." The band's dedication to honor its roots might be related to the fact that they are both Brazilian people. Such cross-cultural roots in the music are the key to the success of "Roots." The band's fusion of Brazilian, Northeastern beats and native Brazilian songs.

Does the day ever come when we start understanding that misrepresentation is no longer an issue that is good as it is just another tabloid? The sheer way of thinking is what keeps changing.

What is Sunset Park? Sunset Park is a Latin neighborhood in Southwest Brooklyn. It is home to Park Road and above Bay Ridge, at the junction of Park Street.

...and many places to visit. There are the numerous hodges, weed spots, tawantubs and churches all across seventh avenue.

You Would Miss/Inexistent! Rheta Perlman (L) and Onyx member Fredro Starr in the film, "Sunset Park."

character or history of any real person, living or dead, or any oral event is entirely imaginary and uneventful." A huge task. This use of the name... is catchy for a Hollywood movie. It’s not much in great excitement over. However, this change, when they then portray real characters.

By representing Sunset Park as a mythic other of the Latin population in this country represents America. This is a part of the Latin-Americans in the Wood has continually ignored Latinos and started to explain Black. Representing what we can and why we are not is not only a central ideological hip-hop culture but something that is part of being Latino. The movie Sunset Park is representing nothing. People like Fredro Starr, a rapper who supposedly represents Queens, should understand that misrepresentation is everything that hip-hop isn’t.

During the day, one can see Sunset Park is that it is a portrait of beautiful culture born of love. A place where all lack of attention is given. It is a place where you are from and who you are is not only a central ideal Roughneck Soldier is known as Sunset Park. There are tales in the story that is so central 4th street in Sunset Park. Here is the latest Kenya. Dugie tape mix is bought with requests for Topway and DJ Charlie.

In retrospect, the beauty of Sunset Park is that it is a portrait of beautiful culture born of love. It is a place where all lack of attention is given. It is a place where you are from and who you are is not only a central ideal. However this changes as they try to portray real culture are vibrant all year round. Nick Parks Brings A Close Shave

By Kerri Ken

Now here's a comedy with a twist. This film is based on a 3-dimensional figure made from plasticine (or "claymation" in the U.S.). The movie tells the story of a shaggy-haired chicken from the prestigious British studio Aardman Animations who decides to leave his "Over the Wall Life" in a "Close Shave." Nick Park's newest film, "Close Shave," is a true masterpiece. This year's Academy Award for Best Animated Short Film.

In the last of the shorts, "A Champion," the cartoonist, the Best of Aardman Animation film, was awarded an Academy Award for Best Animated Short Film in 1991. The whole concept of "Creature Comforts..." is to show animals as humans. The polar bears, chickens and other animals are often asked about their own feelings and their surroundings. "Creature Comforts..." is designed to help viewers understand the animals' behavior and their environment.

"Close Shave" is a story about Gromit, the invention, and a character known as Wallace, the cheese snatcher. The story is about the laughs and the tears of joy, because he is happy to see Wallace and生态环境...

So the Bulls have won 72 games, big deal! On ESPN, Dr. Jack Ramsey put it best when he said that Jordan "single handedly carried the Bulls to 70 wins". It's true. Last year the Bulls record was 47-35 and they only had 35 wins when Jordan came back with 17 games to go. Some people refer to Jordan as "god". Is he? Don't even think about it. If he is, why didn't the Bulls win the title last year when he came back? Was it because they didn't have Dennis Rodman?

Which brings me to my next point. "Is Dennis Rodman a great player?" This was a question that was brought up to me by some of the guys in the gym. The answer is NO. He is a great rebounder! By far the best in the game, but does that really constitute greatness? A great player makes bad teams better within a year or two. Now tell me, if Rodman was stuck with the Timberwolves would they have been a better team or even gotten into the playoffs within two years? I don’t think so. I will say that Rodman, when he’s not headbutting refs, is a great role player. There is no denying that. Role players make good teams very good and in most cases they are essential for a championship. Rodman, Sam Perkins, and Danny Ainge were or are three of the best role players of our time. These players are always looked at and picked up by the right teams, in most cases title contending teams. Teams that already have great players. Rodman has played with Isiah Thomas, Joe Dumars, David Robinson, Terry Cummings, Michael Jordan and Scottie Pippen on the teams that he has been on through out his career. So is he really a great player? You make the call.

The Playoffs are coming!!! The Playoffs are coming!! The NBA’s second season is about to begin and amongst all of the hype are the predictions of who will go all the way. For right now however, I am just going to look at probable first round upsets. Upset #1 Atlanta vs Indiana. Without Reggie Miller the Pacers are in a whole heap of trouble because Haywoode Workman and Mark Jackson cannot handle Steve Smith and Mookie Blaylock. Upset #2 Phoenix over San Antonio. There is no way that Barkley is going to lose in an Arena that looks that gross. Plus, Avery Johnson is going to get torn apart by Kevin Johnson. Upset #3 Portland over Utah. It’s really sad that Stockton and Malone will never win a championship and I really think that Strickland will tear apart Stockton. These are the facts.

There is a baseball note that I would like to discuss. Has anyone seen the real Tino Martinez? I would like him to call me so I could tell him he couldn’t hit to save his life this spring. His terrific .196 batting average really gives Yankee fans something to cheer about considering that Sterling Hitchcock is 5-0 with a 2.51 ERA. Looks at Dwight “the walk-in-rehab” Gooden, he’s 0-3 with an 11.48 ERA and the opponents are batting .351 against him. That means that he’s making every scrubs look like Wade Boggs. Case closed.

Envision Baruch College in the year 2003. A university who’s surroundings are filled with more chaos than any other college in the nation, gets hit with another bombshell…. a new Yankee stadium!

Sure making the national anthem after going to a class that would be over at 7:15 P.M. would be cool. Whether it would be good for New York City is of a major debate going on right now amongst many New Yorkers.

There are those that argue that having a project like this could create jobs and revenues for years to come. Accessibility to and from the Bronx are incomparable to any other ball park and ticket sales have just been sliding as a result of renovating the “House that Ruth Built.” Besides, renovating the home of “The Bronx Bombers” would cost the city millions just to further isolate the ball park from its neighborhood. That’s not the right direction to go in, people wouldn’t be as scared to come to the ball park like they are now if the park were to be more expensive. The financing of a one billion dollar project won’t be a problem Giuliani claims. The city will not pay a nickel, he says, if they sell bonds and the luxury boxes to private investors. Tax payers will not be effected at all. There are also those who feel that after a month like the last one when both the Knicks and Rangers were at home in the Garden, the Circus was in town, the Javits center had their annual Automobile show, and the shopping district had their winter close-out sales, that Mayor Rudolph Giuliani’s proposal to build a multi-purpose ball park over the Long Island Rail Road yards in the lower West 30’s is insane. The only revenues that will be generated are those that enter Mr. Steinbrenner’s pocket. Train accessibility in the city obviously will be a lot better than in the Bronx, but will not resolve the amount of cars coming in and out of the game. Congestion in the Lincoln tunnel before and after events will be atrocious and parking around that area will get even more expensive. The financing of a project as large as this is always a major problem. We, the tax payers, ultimately are going to be the ones that suffer the bill. Giuliani and Pataki say that it won’t cost us a nickel, and selling bonds and luxury boxes will take care of it all, but how many times have politicians made us similar promises in the past? How many cuts in services have there been in New York this year alone? How much of an increase was there towards our tuition bill this year? The city’s budget is a mess! If Steinbrenner doesn’t want to fork over a penny towards the financing of the project, he really doesn’t have to, and the city really can’t do that much to enforce it. So how will an ambitious new project worth one billion dollars ever come into existence without public finance? How will a hundred million dollars worth of interest on these bonds be generated? If the Yankees draw four million people in a year (which is high), that’s twenty five dollars a person!

Steinbrenner wants Giulliani and Pataki to serve him the new Yankee stadium on a silver platter. Giulliani obviously has to do something to keep George from taking the Yankees to Jersey, but how much butt kissing should he do? How many attractions could you put in a one mile radius? In taking a pole at Baruch of fifty students, forty percent of them felt that accessibility and financing for the stadium would give New Yorkers more headaches than the stadium could generate. Twenty percent felt that the plan could help the city and the Bronx grow on the long term, while keeping the Yanks in New York, and forty percent feel that the Yankees should never leave the Bronx at all.

Since Baruch is a microcosm of New York City’s viewpoints, this debate is bound to be one of the greatest disputes to take place in the next mayoral election and that means politics as usual.
