We Built New York (Virtual)

Since 1881, the students of New York City College of Technology and its precursors have been contributing to the vitality and vibrancy of our city. The bricklayers, plumbers, and plasterers who learned their crafts at the New York Trade School literally built this city in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. After World War II, returning GIs sought job skills in such fields as Advertising Design, Chemical Technology and Retail Distribution at the newly founded New York State Institute of Applied Arts & Sciences. Today, after various mergers and name changes, New York City College of Technology is preparing new generations of students for the challenges of a new century. Please view this exhibit and explore a part of this rich history.

The virtual exhibit includes additional materials not included in exhibit, particularly images from yearbooks. Many items were loaned to us by various City Tech departments.
