

To Interview Farm Workers

Post cards will be forwarded to the 200 registrants of the farm program, calling them for interviews, within the next two weeks. Beginning with the upper classmen, the students will be classified, and at the same time will be permitted to select their elective subjects. Since certain subjects may not be taught, students will be asked to make a second or third choice.

"It is still possible to register," Professor Ralph C. Benedict, supervisor of the group, said. Almost all girl applicants can expect to be placed; and boys are especially needed for differential work and to balance the representation of Brooklyn College. Only if B.C. is unable to fill the quota, will other city colleges be invited to join the project.

Since the main object of this experiment is to promote harvesting, Professor Benedict estimates that 100,000 bushels of peas and beans will have been picked by the close of the summer.
