Peckwas, Edward Alan (originally Przekwas; b. Chicago, Illinois, May 1, 1942; d. Chicago, Illinois, June 25, 1993). Businessman, genealogist. The son of a businessman, contractor, and developer who designed and built Chicago’s Midway Motel and operated Drake Motor Sales and Crane Motor Sales, Peckwas attended Hannibal-LaGrange College in Missouri where he earned an A.A. in Commerce (1962) and Northern Illinois University where he earned a B.S. in Liberal Arts (1968). Gaining employment as treasurer of Program Control and Information Systems, Inc., a computer data processing company (1970–71), he and his wife then established the Kiddie Corner Nursery School in Chicago in 1974. They later opened Captain Kidd Preschool (which closed in 1993), and then Children’s Crossing Learning Center. A founding member and president of the Illinois Child Care Association, he was an advocate for the concerns of private child care providers, and was instrumental in bringing those concerns to the attention of state legislators. Peckwas also owned and operated Ed Peckwas Construction Company beginning in 1979, a company involved in the construction of strip malls and the remodeling of child care centers.

Long interested in genealogy and heraldry, Peckwas was president of Heraldry Unlimited, Inc., from 1970–74, which specialized in detailed researching of individual family trees and heraldry, including the preparation of hand colored family crests for clients. Building on this, in 1978 he founded the Polish Genealogical Society with the goal of assisting its members with genealogical research and providing a forum to exchange information. Peckwas served as its first president (1978–91), as well as editor of the Society’s Newsletter (1979–92), the title of which was later changed to Rodziny (The Family). In 1992, the organization changed its name to the Polish Genealogical Society of America. Several articles that Peckwas wrote for the Post Eagle newspaper were published as Collection of Articles on Polish Heraldry (1978). He also wrote the introductions to two small books that the Polish Genealogical Society translated into English: Register of Vital Records of Roman Catholic Parishes Beyond the Bug River (1984), and A Historical Bibliography of Polish Towns, Villages, and Regions (Except Warsaw and Krakow) (1990). Peckwas was a highly sought speaker on Polish heraldry and genealogy. During his tenure as president, the PGSA grew in membership from nine original members to nearly 900, and the Newsletter received first prize in the National Genealogical Society’s Newsletter Competition. After his death, the family opened the Edward A. Peckwas Preparatory Academy (a private elementary school) in 1996, and Peckwas’ extensive book collection was donated to the Library of the Polish Museum of America. Peckwas served on the Board of Directors of the Polish Museum of America, vice president of the National Child Care Association, and president of Society Number 1516 of the Polish Roman Catholic Union of America. He was awarded the Commander’s Cross of the Order of Polonia Restituta in 1985 from the Polish Government-in-exile. — John Drobnicki
