III.

Of the Choice of the Study of Languages.

Of the new students 96 chose the study of Latin.

" " 34 " " French.

The new students were informed, prior to making their choice, that they were permitted to commence their course by studying the Latin, the French, or that they might omit both of these languages, yet no one expressed any wish to commence and pursue a strictly English course, or any part of it, without a daily recitation in one of the languages named above.

All which is respectfully submitted,

HORACE WEBSTER.
