Campuses and the freedom of speech trap.

Aldemaro Romero Jr.
CUNY Bernard M Baruch College

How does access to this work benefit you? Let us know!
Follow this and additional works at: http://academicworks.cuny.edu/bb_pubs

Recommended Citation
In the last few weeks we have heard about an increasing number of incidents on campuses across the nation where politically conservative speakers have been prevented from talking. From Middlebury College in Vermont to the University of California at Berkeley, these cases have something in common: They are giving higher education a bad name.

Some op-ed pieces by liberal authors have attacked conservatives for “bullying” and “silencing” them. But the reality is that these cases have been brought about by a combination of student activism, political correctness, and increasing levels of totalitarianism on college campuses.

Conservative editorialists have used these cases to “prove” that campus climate is discriminatory, while liberal activists have utilized them to accuse conservatives of bullying. In reality, these cases are just the tip of the iceberg.

One of the basic principles of higher education is freedom of speech. This freedom should not be restricted based on political correctness or intolerance of others. The ability to express oneself freely is a basic human right that should be protected at all costs.

After all, many of these measures were introduced to protect students from certain ideas and opinions, but they only ended up silencing them. It’s time for universities to start thinking about the bigger picture and realize that freedom of speech is a fundamental right that should be protected at all costs.

The leadership of colleges and universities must take a more proactive role in ensuring that these incidents do not happen again. They need to work with students, faculty, and administrators to create a campus climate that is welcoming to all ideas and opinions.

Dr. Aldemaro Romero Jr.  Letters from Academia

By doing now the same to conservative speakers, these liberals are becoming just like them. They are not trying to make the world a better place, they are trying to silence those who have a different opinion.

The advantage of liberals is that they have the upper hand in terms of political power. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

But the advantage of conservatives is that they have the upper hand in terms of the marketplace of ideas. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

One of the many ways in which the liberal agenda is being furthered is by the recent wave of new laws that are being passed in various states.

By now doing the same to conservative speakers, these liberals are not treating the problem in the right way. They are not trying to make the world a better place, they are trying to silence those who have a different opinion.

The advantage of liberals is that they have the upper hand in terms of political power. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

But the advantage of conservatives is that they have the upper hand in terms of the marketplace of ideas. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

One of the basic principles of higher education is freedom of speech. This freedom should not be restricted based on political correctness or intolerance of others. The ability to express oneself freely is a basic human right that should be protected at all costs.

After all, many of these measures were introduced to protect students from certain ideas and opinions, but they only ended up silencing them. It’s time for universities to start thinking about the bigger picture and realize that freedom of speech is a fundamental right that should be protected at all costs.

The leadership of colleges and universities must take a more proactive role in ensuring that these incidents do not happen again. They need to work with students, faculty, and administrators to create a campus climate that is welcoming to all ideas and opinions.

Dr. Aldemaro Romero Jr.  Letters from Academia

By now doing the same to conservative speakers, these liberals are becoming just like them. They are not trying to make the world a better place, they are trying to silence those who have a different opinion.

The advantage of liberals is that they have the upper hand in terms of political power. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

But the advantage of conservatives is that they have the upper hand in terms of the marketplace of ideas. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

One of the many ways in which the liberal agenda is being furthered is by the recent wave of new laws that are being passed in various states.

By now doing the same to conservative speakers, these liberals are not treating the problem in the right way. They are not trying to make the world a better place, they are trying to silence those who have a different opinion.

The advantage of liberals is that they have the upper hand in terms of political power. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

But the advantage of conservatives is that they have the upper hand in terms of the marketplace of ideas. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

One of the basic principles of higher education is freedom of speech. This freedom should not be restricted based on political correctness or intolerance of others. The ability to express oneself freely is a basic human right that should be protected at all costs.

After all, many of these measures were introduced to protect students from certain ideas and opinions, but they only ended up silencing them. It’s time for universities to start thinking about the bigger picture and realize that freedom of speech is a fundamental right that should be protected at all costs.

The leadership of colleges and universities must take a more proactive role in ensuring that these incidents do not happen again. They need to work with students, faculty, and administrators to create a campus climate that is welcoming to all ideas and opinions.

The advantage of liberals is that they have the upper hand in terms of political power. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

But the advantage of conservatives is that they have the upper hand in terms of the marketplace of ideas. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

One of the basic principles of higher education is freedom of speech. This freedom should not be restricted based on political correctness or intolerance of others. The ability to express oneself freely is a basic human right that should be protected at all costs.

After all, many of these measures were introduced to protect students from certain ideas and opinions, but they only ended up silencing them. It’s time for universities to start thinking about the bigger picture and realize that freedom of speech is a fundamental right that should be protected at all costs.

The leadership of colleges and universities must take a more proactive role in ensuring that these incidents do not happen again. They need to work with students, faculty, and administrators to create a campus climate that is welcoming to all ideas and opinions.

By now doing the same to conservative speakers, these liberals are becoming just like them. They are not trying to make the world a better place, they are trying to silence those who have a different opinion.

The advantage of liberals is that they have the upper hand in terms of political power. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

But the advantage of conservatives is that they have the upper hand in terms of the marketplace of ideas. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

One of the many ways in which the liberal agenda is being furthered is by the recent wave of new laws that are being passed in various states.

By now doing the same to conservative speakers, these liberals are not treating the problem in the right way. They are not trying to make the world a better place, they are trying to silence those who have a different opinion.

The advantage of liberals is that they have the upper hand in terms of political power. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

But the advantage of conservatives is that they have the upper hand in terms of the marketplace of ideas. They can use this power to silence those who speak on campuses.

One of the basic principles of higher education is freedom of speech. This freedom should not be restricted based on political correctness or intolerance of others. The ability to express oneself freely is a basic human right that should be protected at all costs.

After all, many of these measures were introduced to protect students from certain ideas and opinions, but they only ended up silencing them. It’s time for universities to start thinking about the bigger picture and realize that freedom of speech is a fundamental right that should be protected at all costs.

The leadership of colleges and universities must take a more proactive role in ensuring that these incidents do not happen again. They need to work with students, faculty, and administrators to create a campus climate that is welcoming to all ideas and opinions.