Private colleges can partner to solve issues

One of the discussions around accessibility, cost, and quality among higher education in the United States is the role of private colleges. With many students facing financial challenges, private colleges can be an attractive option. However, the discussion around the cost and value of private higher education remains ongoing.

According to a study by Schaper, the private, non-doctoral (PND) non-profit colleges and universities (providing graduate degrees) deliver lower per-degree costs to states (mainly costs for state contributions to the public universities) than the cost of comparable’s public institutions (which includes costs for state graduate education and graduate students). This is because these private institutions have a cost advantage in both student aid and institutional effectiveness.

The study highlighted that private higher education institutions can provide a better value for students and institutions in the public sector. They can deliver benefits at a far lower per-degree cost to states (mainly costs for state contributions to the public universities) than the cost of comparable’s public institutions (which includes costs for state graduate education and graduate students). This is because these private institutions have a cost advantage in both student aid and institutional effectiveness.

The study found that the PND colleges and universities have a cost advantage over their public counterparts. This advantage is significant, especially for states with limited resources. The study also noted that the PND colleges and universities have a cost advantage over their public counterparts.

The study concluded that private colleges and universities can provide a better value for students and institutions in the public sector. They can deliver benefits at a far lower per-degree cost to states (mainly costs for state contributions to the public universities) than the cost of comparable’s public institutions (which includes costs for state graduate education and graduate students). This is because these private institutions have a cost advantage in both student aid and institutional effectiveness.

Fosshard steps down from post at Morthald College

WEST FRANKFORT (AP) — A local college has announced that the college’s president is stepping down after nearly two decades in the position.

Dr. Aldemaro Romero Jr. announced in a letter to the college’s board of trustees that he will be stepping down from his role as president of Morthald College.

Romero has served as president of Morthald College since 1996, overseeing the college’s growth and development. During his tenure, the college has expanded its academic programs and increased its enrollment.

Romero said in his letter that he decided to step down after 22 years at the college to focus on other opportunities. He said he is grateful for the support and confidence that the college’s board of trustees has shown him over the years.

The college’s board of trustees plans to begin a search for a new president in the coming months.

United Way conducts annual fundraiser on N.O. Nelson Campus

United Way of Greater St. Louis – Southwest Illinois Division’s third annual Power of the Purse event raised $19,000 to help local people.

The event, held on Wednesday, April 27 at the Louisville and Clark Community College – N.O. Nelson Campus, included a silent auction, live auction, and dinner. Attendees had the opportunity to bid on designer handbags, jewelry, scarves, and accessories.

The third annual Power of the Purse was a tremendous success, thanks to the generosity of 200 women in attendance. The event raised money for local charities, such as the St. Louis Area Women’s Fund and the United Way of Greater St. Louis.

The event included a silent auction, live auction, and dinner. Attendees had the opportunity to bid on designer handbags, jewelry, scarves, and accessories.

The evening’s models included Ms. Kerry Ferguson, Ms. Andrea McElvany, and Ms. Jennifer Schmitz. The models were all volunteers who were selected by the Power of the Purse committee.

The event was a huge success, with more than 200 people in attendance. The proceeds from the event will go to the United Way of Greater St. Louis.
