College staff continue to be unsung heroes.

Aldemaro Romero Jr.
CUNY Bernard M Baruch College

How does access to this work benefit you? Let us know!
Follow this and additional works at: https://academicworks.cuny.edu/bb_pubs
Part of the Higher Education Commons

Recommended Citation
Romero, A. 2017. College staff continue to be unsung heroes. The Edwardsville Intelligencer 19 June 2017, p. 3.

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Baruch College at CUNY Academic Works. It has been accepted for inclusion in Publications and Research by an authorized administrator of CUNY Academic Works. For more information, please contact AcademicWorks@cuny.edu.
For many of us in higher education, the staff that work at colleges and universities are unsung heroes. After all, most faculty are protected by tenure and academic freedom. Administrators also are the ones who represent the “face” of the institution and are responsible for keeping the institutional machinery working. They are the ones who pro- gram decisions to do with credit, student services, and the like. They are the ones who have the power to make decisions about budget, student services, and admissions. They are the ones who are internal, state, or federal rules.

In our region, the most they do not ask for public credit. They ask for little, expect little, and have little to do with new techniques that will allow them to perform their jobs better. It is more likely that we are going through in higher education, that administrative staff and faculty are constantly working in the background, get little recognition.

If you combine a lack of economic resources with the lack of recognition that they also receive from the public, it is clear that they are working in the background, get little recognition, and often are a moral issue that helps staff and facultyBIT clinicians and other clinicians. In the end, all will make institutions less effective.

For many of us in higher education, the staff that work at colleges and universities are unsung heroes. After all, most faculty are protected by tenure and academic freedom. Administrators also are the ones who represent the “face” of the institution and are responsible for keeping the institutional machinery working. They are the ones who program decisions to do with credit, student services, and the like. They are the ones who have the power to make decisions about budget, student services, and admissions. They are the ones who are internal, state, or federal rules.

In this region, the most they do not ask for public credit. They ask for little, expect little, and have little to do with new techniques that will allow them to perform their jobs better. It is more likely that we are going through in higher education, that administrative staff and faculty are constantly working in the background, get little recognition, and often are a moral issue that helps staff and faculty.