Illinois schools still lack state funds

CHICAGO (AP) — Schools in Illinois could start classes in a few weeks without receiving money for instruction and operations for the first time in a decade, raising concerns about the academic and personal well-being of students as schools prepare for the new school year. Democrats for nearly two months have held off on funding a budget bill GOP Gov. Bruce Rauner because he’s pledged to strip money for Chicago Public Schools that he declared a “bailout.” If the two sides can’t reach an agreement, some poorer districts worry they won’t be able to keep the school doors open for fall.

In Illinois — one of the state’s largest — run out of money in mid-November if lawmakers don’t agree on a budget. Illinois lawmakers have agreed on a K-12 education funding plan that could result in Illinois soldiers have been called up to defend and guard the southern border of the United States. The soldiers have been deployed to help secure the border from illegal immigration. The soldiers will be stationed at various points along the border, including near border towns and checkpoints. The soldiers will work with local law enforcement agencies and the Department of Homeland Security to enforce immigration laws and prevent illegal crossings. The deployment is a result of the ongoing immigration debate in Congress and the administration's efforts to reinforce the southern border. The Illinois National Guard has a long history of involvement in national security and disaster response efforts. The soldiers will receive training and equipment to help them carry out their duties. The deployment is expected to last for several months. The Illinois National Guard is headquartered in Springfield, Illinois.
