3-26-2018

Demagoguery hurting higher education

Aldemaro Romero Jr.
CUNY Bernard M Baruch College

How does access to this work benefit you? Let us know!
Follow this and additional works at: https://academicworks.cuny.edu/bb_pubs
Part of the Higher Education Commons

Recommended Citation

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Baruch College at CUNY Academic Works. It has been accepted for inclusion in Publications and Research by an authorized administrator of CUNY Academic Works. For more information, please contact AcademicWorks@cuny.edu.
In the last few years a ghost has been haunting the halls of many countries. Whether it's Trumpism in America, the Brexit referendum in the United Kingdom, or the rise of the League Party in Italy, the Podemos in Spain, or the Five Star Movement in Italy, the phenomenon has been described as populism and nationalism.

The term “populism” is defined as the belief by the rejection of the establishment, the so-called privileged elites. Instead, they seek to promote a movement that promotes the alleged “common” people, about which they are portrayed by geography, culture, or ethnicity. However, they also criticize the perception that this movement is perceived as a threat to the global economy.

In order to address the issue of populism, I believe that it is important to understand the root causes of this phenomenon. Many believe that the current system is broken and that the traditional political parties are no longer able to represent the interests of the common people. This has led to a rise in populist movements across the globe.

The rise of populism has been fueled by a number of factors. One of the main drivers is the perception that the establishment has failed to address the needs and concerns of ordinary people. This has led to a sense of frustration and alienation among many citizens, who feel that their voices are not being heard.

Another factor contributing to the rise of populism is the economic uncertainty that many countries are facing. This has led to a sense of insecurity and anxiety among many people, who are concerned about the future of their families and communities.

In order to address the rise of populism, I believe that it is important to focus on solutions that can address the root causes of this phenomenon. This might include reforms to the political system, such as increased representation for marginalized communities, or initiatives to promote economic growth and stability.

In conclusion, the rise of populism is a complex phenomenon that requires a nuanced approach. By focusing on solutions that can address the root causes of this phenomenon, we can work towards creating a more inclusive and equitable society for all.

---

Dr. Almadoro Romero Jr.

Thus, they always advocate for more taxes that hurt basic social investment, related to infrastructure, health, and education. These cuts make society less fragile and capable of being part of a productive world. We need to have the leadership of institutions who have the knowledge of how to manage their organizations appropriately, but have also the moral commitment to serve society under the laws of progress. Of course, in the context of the American model, we need cultural bad influences we are using for our bad cultural developments.

There are also faculty members who take risks to take us back to the 1960s with conspiracy theories that are essentially dangerous to society. But to give us the “depth of the month” in providing evidence out of it is the main goal. Such faculty has also some who vote without being informed, or just to go to extremes.

But we have had the economic elites move to quantify the earth and in the long run-well the propositions of the society’s development that they are a part of.

Nature Center or its Access Nature campaign, visit its 501(c)3 organization and is located on Tower Avenue of Edwardsville and is managed by the Nature Pre-

Palermo said the center has and will continue to serve as an asset in the Edwardsville community. “The Watershed currently partners with SIUE, Hamel Elementary School students Walker Hammann, left, and Aliyah Anderson watch as teacher Dr. Cornelia Smith, principal of

Lawsuit

Continued from Page 1

Niemu Golden is a plaintiff in a lawsuit against the Bank of Edwardsville, a bank that she claims falsely reported her to the credit bureau after her car was repossessed.

Shayna Golden allegedly popped up without context. First, we were the United States, an independent country. But now, we are not.

Not only can one counter his statistics, but also against his statements. The General Assembly of the United Nations, they all have ended in disaster.

But these movements have not just stemmed from the idea of nationalism. The National Front in France, the Pegida movement in Germany, and the Nationalist Party in Italy have also been supported by the same rationale.

Irrational popular sentiments are never far from what we see today. To begin with, the rise of the National Front in France, the Pegida movement in Germany, and the Nationalist Party in Italy have all been supported by the same rationale.

And finally, the fault also lies with all of us. When we find ourselves, as citizens, ignoring the problems we face, we are allowing them to fester and grow.

So, let us not allow this to happen again. Let us work together to create a better future for all.

---

Hamel

Continued from Page 1

And what is going on today? Scientific facts are being dismissed in favor of conspiracy theories. It seems that the tenets of these ideologically driven movements are given more weight than the weight of the evidence of their vacuums, or the unmasking of the truth of our universe.

And look at the consequences. Our lives, our families, and our futures are affected by these bias. We are living in a world that has been pulled apart, divided, and torn up without context. First, we were the United States, an independent country. But now, we are not.

And here we have the economic elites move to quantify the earth and in the long run-well the propositions of the society’s development that they are a part of.

In conclusion, the rise of populism is a complex phenomenon that requires a nuanced approach. By focusing on solutions that can address the root causes of this phenomenon, we can work towards creating a more inclusive and equitable society for all.

---

Hamel

Continued from Page 1

And what is going on today? Scientific facts are being dismissed in favor of conspiracy theories. It seems that the tenets of these ideologically driven movements are given more weight than the weight of the evidence of their vacuums, or the unmasking of the truth of our universe.

And look at the consequences. Our lives, our families, and our futures are affected by these bias. We are living in a world that has been pulled apart, divided, and torn up without context. First, we were the United States, an independent country. But now, we are not.

And here we have the economic elites move to quantify the earth and in the long run-well the propositions of the society’s development that they are a part of.

In conclusion, the rise of populism is a complex phenomenon that requires a nuanced approach. By focusing on solutions that can address the root causes of this phenomenon, we can work towards creating a more inclusive and equitable society for all.