*I have a terrible story
about social media
SPIT IT OUT
lying is easier on the internet
Does your body panic?*

I have a terrible story
about social media.
I AM WORKING WITH OTHERS to address lying online through a sprawling project of public intellectualism and engaged citizenship in a time of confusion.

Does your body panic?

*What if we Aimed for Gentle truths?
For now.⁸*

Over the 1st 100 days of the Trump administration—
January 20, 2017 to April 29, 2017—
I aimed for something much harder.

My pledge⁹ on February 18, 2017:

To disrupt the new President's First 100 days by posting #100truths-fakenews with linked actions, analyses, and organizations committed to digital media literacy. In so doing, I will produce a 100 point digital primer to counter the purposeful confusion, lack of trust, and disorientation of the current administration's relation to media, offering instead a steady, reasoned set of resources seeking clarity and justice.

Over those 100 days, I built a mighty digital media literacy primer online that:

- Held and developed my own thinking
- Got reflexive at around 50"
- Got dark at around 75"
- Mapped Trump's actions and 35 people's reactions
- Was a daily writing practice

I learned many hard truths through the process:

fake news r us^m: we are implicated by, produce, and circulate this crisis whenever we study, teach, or try to fix it.

virality is virility^{tt}: a potent mix of internet-fueled falsity, masculine grandiosity, and resulting real-world bellicosity undergirds fake news and our efforts to understand it.

art answers to fake questions^z: departures from evidence-based, indexically-linked practices into realms of truth-telling verifiable by different logics might get us out of the rabbit-hole where we get redirected.

our internet truths trump media lies^v: we must name, share, and honor our own lived experiences within social media as another form of honesty in desperate times. Let's do this first offline, together where we live, work, struggle or learn.

heed the poet's callⁿ: poetry, a time-honored word-based form of truth-telling outside the logics of indexical mediation might be one well-honed literacy practice well-suited to this crisis.

But this was not yet the radical digital media literacy I sought. Something interactive and between people, in a place that was both a space and a community, about truths generated from our own experience in the world and with each other.

At Occidental College, six youth poets, members of the Los Angeles Get Lit Players performed their poems at a Fake News Poetry Multi-Media Event. From a lofty balcony.

On a huge media wall eleven screens and bright colors played out alternative versions of their poems, broken into lines moving, flitting, skirting and holding new chambers for attention...

Call the man of the year a liar⁶⁶

Glady!

I would be first in line.

From the first moment of his presidency, he inflated a scraggly cloud to mammoth proportions.

It was the largest audience to witness an inauguration, period.

He is beloved, he is the prophet of all things true, period.

Some people are haters--sad!--but those who know best know him, period.

There are a lot of small things about him, but his lies are enormous like his crowds, like his supporters, like his heart, like the coal mine he's reopening right under our feet--America, how does black lung feel?

How does it feel being cheated by a cheesy smile balanced on an emergency red tie? How did a small loan of a million dollars become the ruining of billions of lives? How does it feel to be led by the lovechild of racist comments on Facebook and unimaginable power?

America, get your heads out of your echo chambers.

There is more to politics than what you want to believe. There is more to know than what they show you.

Do not mistake easily obtainable for true. Do not mistake your agreement for divine approval.

Where there is doubt, there is still hope.

Period

(Mika Judge⁶⁷)

The literacy is in the doing and saying and listening.
The literacy is in the power of friendly faces in a room.

The radical digital media literacy is in the listening and writing and reading together in time and space.

1. I don't Cite you,
I sit with you.

2. Questioning
The Structure Outside Of The Body

But Must Trust
Our Bones⁶⁷

Have conversations.

Have Conversations or Protect your self from them⁶⁸

The radical digital media literacy is in our bodies.

Hurt stress.
Clammy Socialize
Psychotic stress
Overwhelmed addicted planet.
Cellphone, phone, cellphone plug
Cellphone, ipod, email, iphone, cellphone,
Phone
Robotic rich blurriness.
Connections

Expansive failure
Distracted attacked
Another life.
Brain heart eyes mind
Stomach neck
Above my eyes Brain
Mind⁶⁹

The radical digital media literacy is a psychotechnology of care. A contrived moment.

Contrived Moment

Something weird happened
To TIME

At The Back Of My Tongue

My body is the noise of Everything I ever liked

Mutating like slime
Mould.⁷⁰

Resist how we are framed.⁷¹

Resist how we are framed thoughts are from the mind
We believe no one should have to face a mental health problem alone
Feel lonely as I seek truth truth⁷²

-7-

"Let me put aside for a moment the notion of 'poetry' and think instead of a broader category, what philosopher of media Bernard Stiegler has called 'psychotechnologies,' techniques and regimes through which cognitive faculties (especially attention) are formed or destroyed. According to Stiegler, the contemporary 'programming industries,' which would include social networks as well as digital advertisers, operate psychotechnologies on an industrial scale in order to control, sell, and corrupt attention. Fake news, from this perspective, is only an especially egregious symptom of a pervasive malady: even those of us who (we assure ourselves) have not been duped by viral fake news are still constantly distracted and manipulated by other arms of the programming industries. In this light, we don't simply need to solve the specific problem of fake news."
(Kyle Booten²³)

We need new psychotechnologies of care, aids to reclaim our capacity to pay attention in ways that are not self-destructive.

We need new psychotechnologies built on our facts:

- People want to talk and learn together about fake news
- People want to think, engage, and express differently than how we usually do online
- Process matters over product

*Technology is a weapon, a knife. A gun.
How do you authenticate a person? You pay them.
The truth is . . . candy? I don't know.²⁴*

The radical digital media literacy is in our communities, our courage,
our desires to be powerful and free,
and to be heard and seen. To be loved.

I hold the phone in my hand. My hand is freezing. I look at the phone. I look away from the phone. There's a world there.

The phone says that's a lie. The world is in the phone. I face the phone and tap. I flip from phone to face. You face the phone and walk away. Phone, get in the sea. We're doing this for everyone. You're everyone else. Come on, come out. Aerobicize with me. It isn't for me, I promise. I promise I'm more than me. It's for the thing we're not yet. It's true I haven't missed you.

*It's also true I have.
(Sam Solomon²⁵)*

It's for the thing we're not yet.
