Connecticut Practice Materials: A Selective Annotated Bibliography*

Jonathan Saxon

The author provides a selective listing of Connecticut legal publications, including primary and secondary materials, that are commonly used in the practice of Connecticut law. Both print and electronic resources are covered.

This annotated bibliography is one in a series on state practice materials published in the Law Library Journal. Both primary and secondary materials currently used in the practice of law in Connecticut are included.

The bibliography is arranged in four main parts. The first, “General Publications,” includes primary source materials and their associated finding tools and citators, as well as legal directories. The second, “Periodicals,” includes legal journals, newsletters, and newspapers that are published in Connecticut or are commonly used in the practice of Connecticut law. The third, “Electronic Resources,” lists Internet sites and online services that are of interest to Connecticut law practitioners as well as CD-ROMs that contain primarily Connecticut legal materials. The fourth, “Connecticut Practice Treatises and Materials,” covers secondary sources commonly used by Connecticut legal practitioners, including sources with a Connecticut focus on a wide range of legal specialties.

Specifically excluded from this bibliography are audiovisual works, articles and chapters from larger works, and databases and libraries on Westlaw and LEXIS-NEXIS. Continuing legal education materials and treatises that have gone more than five years without updating have been included only where they are the only or best source in a particular legal area. Researchers who are looking for historic or other Connecticut legal materials not found in this bibliography should consult the sources listed under “Legal Research and Bibliography” in the “Connecticut Practice Treatises and Materials” section of this bibliography.

Most annotations appearing in this bibliography have been created through direct review of the published materials. Where the materials were unavailable, annotations were created through review of publishers’ sales literature and Web sites. Bracketed information in the citations has been supplied by me.

Contact information for publishers of the materials in this bibliography is provided in the appendix. Publishers should be contacted to determine publication status and prices for materials. Due to recent and numerous publisher mergers and acquisitions, the publisher information in many of the actual sources has become outdated. The current publishers of those sources are included in this bibliography, with the original publisher enclosed in parentheses.
