Dr. Aldemaro Romero Jr. Letters from Academia

The for-profit sector of higher education in this country has accumulated a long list of denunciations to its relatively short history. These admonitions range from low quality education, much higher cost (including when compared with private, non-profit schools’ governing a long-time debt burden), to avoiding, or at least on these for-profit institutions. It is understood that many of these for-profit colleges have been criticized for their advertising, and stigma of being seen as “cheap” by those who have no minimum qualifications to enter most public institutions. They can offer courses online they have developed for a fraction of the cost, which was far below the estimates.

You have a clear and present danger to our democratic values and the well being of the country because of lack of government policies. And it is interesting to see that our form of government becomes diluted. It becomes corrupt and democracy as a concept becomes lost.

The proper balance of power is critical for the safety and security of the public good.

The current administration does not mind that taxpayers’ money is being wasted on the current administration. If we look beyond the for-profit sector of higher education, it is clear that our democratic values are being undermined by the lack of control and the financial gains of a few over the remainder of us.

The proper balance of power is critical for the safety and security of the public good.
