CORRECTION

The report on the “First National Conference on Women’s Studies in India” in our Spring issue was incorrectly identified as being by Florence Howe. This report was actually an excerpt from the official press release of the Conference, with additional material incorporated from notes written by Maithreyi Krishna Raj. Also, we regret that the photograph on page 21 of that issue was improperly cropped.
All the Women Are White, All the Blacks Are Men, But Some of Us Are Brave

Political theory, literary, social and historical essays, bibliographies, syllabi—here for the first time are the materials needed to develop courses and course units on the lives of black women.

"Everything that human beings participate in is ultimately subjective and biased, and there is nothing inherently wrong with that. The bias of black women’s studies must consider as primary the knowledge that will save black women’s lives."

—from the introduction

But Some of Us Are Brave includes notes on studying slavery, representative issues in the social sciences, black women’s health, black women in higher education, black women and the church, black women novelists, poets, playwrights and composers, plus the politics of black women’s studies, black feminism, racism in the women’s movement, and much more!

Black Women’s Studies

"Exciting! Affirmations and the beginning of a new era, where the ‘women’ in women’s studies will no longer mean ‘white.’" —Audre Lorde

"This is ‘necessary bread’ for women of all colors. The essays contain not only fact and durable resources, but some of the best writing I’ve seen around."

—Adrienne Rich

"A clear statement about black women. Congratulations to the editors for compiling such a fine interdisciplinary volume."

—Geraldine K. Brookins, Ph.D., Jackson State University

Back-to-School Bonus for Teachers

Fiction, autobiography, and historical documents—many published here for the first time—illuminate the history of "schoolmarm’s" from 1830 to 1920, on the frontier, in the South, in cities.

"I like the book a great deal. It is a rich assortment of primary sources that give a vivid view of the everyday lives of teachers—a useful corrective to the rather abstract quality of much writing on the subject. The introductions are clear and lively and sound."

—David Tyack, Stanford University, author of The One Best System

"An impressive and important collection documenting the extent to which women teachers have been makers of history and actors on their own behalf. This book makes an essential contribution to the history of [both] women and teachers."

How-to and What for Ages 9-14

20 Complete Lesson Plans Bring Women's Studies to the Middle School

We all know the statistics: from 1974 to 1978 the average number of pages on women in standard 500-600 page history texts increased from one to 14. Until now there has been no one set of materials addressed specifically to the needs of girls and boys in an important transitional period, 10-14 year olds. Eileen Abrams' practical book is designed to fill that gap and make your life a little easier. She tells how to develop an entire course or use the activities selectively in different curriculum units and includes:

• displays for the classroom
• contests and story projects
• units on tools and toys
• birthdays of famous women
• and, of course, a complete resource list of print and non-print materials
• all activities teacher-developed and field-tested at the AMY School, Philadelphia.

Activity supplements may be reproduced directly for students from:

The Best 100 Books of Contemporary Fiction for Girls and Boys, Ages 9-14

The authors of Books for Today's Children now tell how to pick your way through books for young readers that may include sensitive and fully-drawn young characters, stereotyped secondary characters, wonderful grandparents, parents—especially mothers—in the role of "heavies," and insensitivity to some social issues but not to others. Jeanne Bracken and Sharon Wigutoff explore seven important themes in junior fiction, from self-awareness, gender, and peer groupings to families, foster care and adoption, aging and illness, separation and divorce. They also take special care to point out where to find the handful of good new books on Third World children and their families.

Of the first book, Emergency Librarian wrote,

"Anyone searching for books combining a good story and appealing illustrations with a strong message toppling the entrenched stereotypes from their perch, need look no further. The mini-reviews of each book listed spell it all out neatly, and highlight particularly pertinent points."

For the best in junior fiction one need now look no further than:
