New research center offering tours

For the Intelligence

ALTON -- The National Great Rivers Research and Education Center Jerry F. Costello Conference Field Station — that strange-looking new building along the Mississippi River just east of downtown Alton — will be open for public tours beginning May 1.

For the first time since its opening and dedication last October, guests can take a guided tour of the 36,000-square-foot research facility, which has already won a national award for its green roof design and ecological elements, including solar and hydro-kinetic systems, internal and external water recycling systems, and a roadway that will divert and retain stormwater.

The facility is home to the National Great Rivers Research and Education Center, a product of an educational partnership formed in 2001 among Lewis and Clark Community College, the University of Illinois and the Illinois Natural History Survey.

The site, on Illinois 145 near the confluence of the Mississippi, Illinois and Missouri rivers, gives local and visiting researchers access to the river plus wet labs facilities to conduct experiments in studying the river system.

Visitors will learn about the building’s ecological elements, including solar and hydro-kinetic systems, internal and external water recycling systems, and a roadway that will divert and retain stormwater.

VANDALS

Decker, who also serves as a trombonist in the band, said vandals are a problem.

“Vandals are a problem that has caused to both association and band,” Decker said. “I feel like the property is in the thousands of dollars and it’s important to keep it clean.”

The damage done to the community has been spray painted, broken windows, broken furniture, etc. Since the community has been defaced, some with vulgar language.

Decker believes that the roboscope, which will operate automatically and precisely, will prevent vandalism.

“For some reason, people are intent on defacing,” Sabby said. “I can see my students evolving and thinking about the future of what humanity is all about instead of the bricks and bits they see when they are out.”
