Lana Hagan teaching acting a hard act to follow

Aldemaro Romero Jr.
CUNY Bernard M Baruch College

Recommended Citation
https://academicworks.cuny.edu/bb_pubs/687
Rabies Continued from Page 1

The animal itself is usually pretty docile, but if it finds itself in an unfamiliar place or an unfamiliar situation, it can start displaying aggressive behavior. Rabies is a fearsome potential obstacle to the health of a pet or a wild animal, and even a rabid dog can cause a person to be infected. In Illinois, rabies is transmitted to people through the bite of an infected animal. Although rabies is usually a disease of animals, it can also infect human beings. Rabies is most commonly transmitted to people when the saliva of an infected animal enters a wound or the mucous membranes. If a person is bitten by a rabid animal, they should seek medical attention immediately. Rabies vaccination requirements in Illinois are in place to prevent the disease from spreading into the general population.

In Madison County, the health department has its own rabies control program. In the spread of rabies, “Rabies vaccine is extremely important,” Dr. Damon Arnold said a positive test for rabies was reported in Franklin County on June 8 and Tazewell County soon.

Dr. Arnold urged everyone to get rid of any stagnant water around their homes to reduce the number of mosquitoes, which are the carriers of the rabies virus. He also urged everyone to get booster shots, in case of any of the above-mentioned situations. He said, “The rabies vaccine is a great tool to help reduce the number of mosquitoes, which helps to prevent rabies from spreading even further.”

Rabies vaccination is extremely important to the health of a pet or a wild animal. Some of the positive tests for rabies were in Laclede County, and those tests were from mosquitoes and bats.

“People should store their garbage outside to prevent rabies,” Dr. Arnold said. “We both have full-time jobs on the farm and we can no longer juggle our work and the farm. There are very few things that are not under control of the owner. We have seen a lot of instances where people have not treated their animals properly. Obviously, the time has come to protect our own farms.”

In the meantime, the blues have been building in Illinois. Some believe that the problem is the result of a lack of training in rabies. Others believe that the state’s health department should be more proactive, according to the IDPH.

Illinois has a high risk of severe rabies outbreaks.

Sixty-one human cases of West Nile Virus have been reported in Illinois, down from a high of 257 in 2002.

Divers find bodies in Rend Lake

BENDEN, (AP) — Divers have found the body of a 19-year-old Arkansas man who disappeared while diving at a popular Illinois lake for more than a day, a diver for the Illinois Natural Heritage Agency said Monday.

The search for John Allen, 19, was suspended Sunday afternoon, after Franklin County authorities said they had located Allen’s vehicle Sunday morning, but he was not seen aboard it.

The agency said John Allen, 19, disappeared while diving at a popular Illinois lake for more than a day, a diver for the Illinois Natural Heritage Agency said Monday.

Illinois Natural Heritage Agency spokesman David Criswell said the agency was trying to be careful in the area where the search is taking place.

“Today we have to be very careful about the search area,” Criswell said. “We’re making sure that the area is safe before we start the search.”

Criswell said the search area is a popular swimming area and that the lake is very deep.

The agency said it was not clear why Brown died. However, Criswell said the agency would not get into the specifics of what happened in the search. The agency said it was focusing on the search for Allen and that it did not want to get ahead of the search.

The agency said it was not clear why Brown died. However, Criswell said the agency would not get into the specifics of what happened in the search. The agency said it was focusing on the search for Allen and that it did not want to get ahead of the search.

Regional

Lana Hagan acting teaching a hard act to follow

Budgets for the arts in public schools are under serious threat. Not only has funding for the arts been shrinking, but arts education has been disappearing altogether in schools throughout Illinois. From Chicago to Springfield to suburban districts, school administrators, and even parents for schools across the state, are having to find new ways to fund arts education. Unfortunately, the problem is not going to get any easier in the future. This means that the future of arts education in Illinois is at risk.

The arts are not only beneficial for students but also for the community. They provide a creative outlet for students and can help them develop important skills such as critical thinking, creativity, and problem-solving. In addition, the arts have been shown to improve student performance. A study by the National Endowment for the Arts found that students who participate in the arts are more likely to graduate from high school and go on to college.

The arts are not only beneficial for students but also for the community. They provide a creative outlet for students and can help them develop important skills such as critical thinking, creativity, and problem-solving. In addition, the arts have been shown to improve student performance. A study by the National Endowment for the Arts found that students who participate in the arts are more likely to graduate from high school and go on to college.

One example of a school that is doing a great job of funding the arts is Rend Lake. Rend Lake is a school located in a rural area of Illinois and has a population of about 1200 students. The school has a strong commitment to arts education and has been successful in raising funds for the arts.

“Rend Lake is a school that is doing a great job of funding the arts. They have a strong commitment to arts education and have been successful in raising funds for the arts,” said Dr. Damon Arnold, a pediatrician and public health expert at the University of Illinois.

“Rend Lake is a school that is doing a great job of funding the arts. They have a strong commitment to arts education and have been successful in raising funds for the arts,” said Dr. Damon Arnold, a pediatrician and public health expert at the University of Illinois.

The school has a number of programs to support the arts, including a theater program, a music program, and an art program. The school also has a number of partnerships with local arts organizations, such as the Rend Lake Symphony Orchestra and the Rend Lake Chorale.

“Rend Lake is a school that is doing a great job of funding the arts. They have a strong commitment to arts education and have been successful in raising funds for the arts,” said Dr. Damon Arnold, a pediatrician and public health expert at the University of Illinois.

The school has a number of programs to support the arts, including a theater program, a music program, and an art program. The school also has a number of partnerships with local arts organizations, such as the Rend Lake Symphony Orchestra and the Rend Lake Chorale.

“Rend Lake is a school that is doing a great job of funding the arts. They have a strong commitment to arts education and have been successful in raising funds for the arts,” said Dr. Damon Arnold, a pediatrician and public health expert at the University of Illinois.

The school has a number of programs to support the arts, including a theater program, a music program, and an art program. The school also has a number of partnerships with local arts organizations, such as the Rend Lake Symphony Orchestra and the Rend Lake Chorale.

“Rend Lake is a school that is doing a great job of funding the arts. They have a strong commitment to arts education and have been successful in raising funds for the arts,” said Dr. Damon Arnold, a pediatrician and public health expert at the University of Illinois.

The school has a number of programs to support the arts, including a theater program, a music program, and an art program. The school also has a number of partnerships with local arts organizations, such as the Rend Lake Symphony Orchestra and the Rend Lake Chorale.