Dennis Mares has a clue about criminal gangs

Aldemaro Romero Jr.
CUNY Bernard M Baruch College

Recommended Citation
Romero, Aldemaro Jr., "Dennis Mares has a clue about criminal gangs" (2011). CUNY Academic Works.
https://academicworks.cuny.edu/bb_pubs/693

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Baruch College at CUNY Academic Works. It has been accepted for inclusion in Publications and Research by an authorized administrator of CUNY Academic Works. For more information, please contact AcademicWorks@cuny.edu.
Simon will perform at fair

Communities. Since the program started in 2008, Morton said in a news release. "The real problem in the right to own guns. The real problem in

"Gangs have always been around," said Mares. "And I think that we have more now because we have more minorities that are more urban and more people of color. And I think that's the reason why we have less access to guns," said Mares.

"But the fact of the matter is that gang-related shootings have gotten worse, particularly over the last few years," Mares added.

In the past, the state has studied the pattern of violence in Europe, Mares said. "And I think there is a pattern. There is a pattern of violence in the United States that is much higher than in the Netherlands. He received his combined Bachelor's and Master's degrees in law enforcement from the University of Illinois in Edwardsville. His show, "Segue," can be heard also want to look at the possible relationship between crime mapping and police resource allocation, he said.

"In Europe. marijuana use is decriminalized," Mares said. "And in the United States, we have a different concept of the police. In America, the police have a legal right to stop and frisk people, and for that reason, the police have a greater amount of power than in Europe."

"My main concern is the use of drugs by kids," Mares said. "I think that the police need to be more active in enforcing the law."

"We have a lot of evidence that the police need to be more active in enforcing the law," Mares said. "And we need to have more resources to do that."