owns the others are Titan, Holly and Liberty have been weight pulling with their Alaskan dogs. "It’s been a lot of fun. It’s not just fun," Powell said.

"Weight pulling isn’t about making money, it’s about the dog and the bond," he said. "The dog’s instincts kick in. For Powell’s malamute, Ratchet, if he stops, it’s not because he’s quitting, but because you don’t," she said. "It’s what your dog trusts in you. Weight pulling is a trust."

Scottsdale, Arizona — recently took top honors at the Alaskan Malamute Club of America 2011 National Specialty competition in Spokane, Wash.

"It’s about the bond between dog and handler," Powell said. "It’s about trust, about who you are, about where you’ve been."

"I’ve been in the process of teaching my dog and my dog’s instincts kick in. For Powell’s malamute, Ratchet, if he stops, it’s not because he’s quitting, but because you don’t," she said. "It’s what your dog trusts in you. Weight pulling is a trust."
