2015

It’s time to discuss race relations on campuses

Aldemaro Romero Jr.
CUNY Bernard M Baruch College

How does access to this work benefit you? Let us know!
Follow this and additional works at: https://academicworks.cuny.edu/bb_pubs
Part of the Higher Education Commons

Recommended Citation
Romero, Aldemaro Jr., "It’s time to discuss race relations on campuses" (2015). CUNY Academic Works.
https://academicworks.cuny.edu/bb_pubs/809

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Baruch College at CUNY Academic Works. It has been accepted for inclusion in Publications and Research by an authorized administrator of CUNY Academic Works. For more information, please contact AcademicWorks@cuny.edu.
Dr. Aldemaro Romero Jr. Letter from Academia

At the beginning of the academic year, some students were confused about the culture of college close-knit student societies and also about controversial political positions. They did not understand the value of being a part of a campus social or political organization. The president of the college quickly addressed this issue by sending a letter to the students explaining the importance of being a part of any group that one chooses to join.

In the past, there have been many discussions about the role of colleges in shaping the values of students. Some believe that colleges should be places for the discussion of all kinds of issues, and others believe that they should be more focused on academic excellence. The president of the college is trying to find a balance between these two views.

The president is committed to making college a place where students can learn about different viewpoints and have the opportunity to express their own opinions. He believes that this is important for the development of young people and that it helps them to become more informed citizens.

The president is also aware of the challenges that come with having a diverse student body. He is committed to creating an inclusive environment where all students feel welcome and supported.

In conclusion, the president of the college is working hard to make the institution a place where students can learn, grow, and thrive. He is committed to creating a community that is open to all and that values diversity and inclusiveness.