Alumni of the arts are often happier than most

Aldemaro Romero Jr.
CUNY Bernard M Baruch College

How does access to this work benefit you? Let us know!
Follow this and additional works at: https://academicworks.cuny.edu/bb_pubs

Part of the Higher Education Commons

Recommended Citation
Romero, Aldemaro Jr., "Alumni of the arts are often happier than most" (2015). CUNY Academic Works.
https://academicworks.cuny.edu/bb_pubs/901

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Baruch College at CUNY Academic Works. It has been accepted for inclusion in Publications and Research by an authorized administrator of CUNY Academic Works. For more information, please contact AcademicWorks@cuny.edu.
Dr. Almedero Romero Jr. Letters from Academia

Dear Readers,

In the past, when discussing the arts education in higher education, we often hear that the arts are not profitable. However, in reality, the arts are a valuable asset to any institution. The arts have the ability to bring people together, to foster creativity, and to promote social engagement. Arts education is important not only for those who choose to pursue careers in the arts, but also for those who wish to learn new skills and experiences. By providing arts education, institutions can help students develop critical thinking and problem-solving skills, which are essential in today's world.

In this issue, we will be discussing the role of arts education in the community. We will examine how arts education can impact economic development, as well as how it can contribute to the overall quality of life. We will also explore the importance of arts education for students, as it can help them develop a sense of identity and self-worth.

I hope you enjoy this issue and find it informative. As always, I am available to answer any questions you may have.

Sincerely,

Dr. Almedero Romero Jr.