2015

2016 can be a year of opportunity for higher ed

Aldemaro Romero Jr.
CUNY Bernard M Baruch College

How does access to this work benefit you? Let us know!
Follow this and additional works at: https://academicworks.cuny.edu/bb_pubs
Part of the Higher Education Commons

Recommended Citation
Romero, Aldemaro Jr., "2016 can be a year of opportunity for higher ed" (2015). CUNY Academic Works.
https://academicworks.cuny.edu/bb_pubs/918

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Baruch College at CUNY Academic Works. It has been accepted for inclusion in Publications and Research by an authorized administrator of CUNY Academic Works. For more information, please contact AcademicWorks@cuny.edu.
2016 will be a year of opportunity for high ed

2016 will be a year of opportunity for higher education. The year that resets the cycle of fundraising for public colleges has continued, and has resulted in some of the most ambitious fundraising efforts in the history of the institutions.

Instead of changing the business models of their institutions, leaders have been finding the strongest reaction of just cutting their budgets. These cuts have made the opportunity for higher education even more urgent, as they are something that are affecting all institutions.

Then we have witnessed plenty ugly racial inci- dent after another, as well as a proliferation of individual and lingering racism that has characterized the 21st century. Yet, attacks on affirmative action policies continue to mount but these policies have been the mainstay for higher education. Campus shootings, narrow-mindedness of racial integration, continu- ous obsession with meaningless college rankings, parochialism, and the fact that all public colleges are not prepared for higher education. These are some of the prominent signs of higher education. The public has not seen a lot of people promoting to provide an unbiased and simple way for people to understand the different systems of higher education.

Probably the biggest challenge that higher education has been misinformation about it and the fact that there is not a lot of information available. Just a few years ago, the only thing that was known about higher education was that just plain disparaging of the whole postsecondary enterprise based on a wave of anti-affirmative-action rhetoric by the school districts in the United States. The efforts to close the gap between the two have been successful.

The mission of the schools is to provide a variety of educational opportunities to prepare students for lifelong learning and to contribute to the economic and social development of the nation and the world community. It is the role of the schools to provide a variety of educational opportunities to provide a student with the knowledge and skills necessary to succeed in college, to learn from past experiences. Case in point, the schools need to do more than just provide a student with the knowledge and skills necessary to succeed in college, to learn from past experiences. Case in point, the schools need to do more than just provide a student with the knowledge and skills necessary to succeed in college, to learn from past experiences.