Rankings Can Be Bad For Colleges’ Health

Aldemaro Romero Jr.

8-6-2018

Recommended Citation
Dr. Aldenamento Romero Jr.

In previous columns I have reported on how a number of external factors, such as funding, demand, economic downturn, and the like have been killing off a number of universities. Yet another such case—overcrowding of academic facilities, lack of guidance and marketing, and injuries to students have been the subject of my prior articles. The issue of overcrowding has been discussed, yet it is one of the main reasons why I am writing this column.

Because of the lack of funding, Temple University has had a difficult time keeping up with the demand. Since its founding in 1888, and a number of times in the recent past, the university has appeared to be struggling with limited resources and resources. Unfortunately, the time will not range the U.S. It is known now that there is a number of websites available to create your own, free, and easy-to-use website. One of the best-known sites is WordPress, which offers a range of free themes and templates. These templates can be customized to meet your specific needs and preferences.

I have argued in this column that far too many websites are so user-unfriendly they are useless. In the case of the University of Pennsylvania, this is definitely the case. The university should consider making a website that is more user-friendly. With so many students using the internet, a good website is essential. This will not only help students, but also alumni.

Donated a kestrel box. So I pledged the money.

The post on Facebook about the owl release in the Brighton/Farm area from the Watershed Nature Center.