

New York has issued 6,050 Certificates of Relief or Certificates of Good Conduct since 2006, according to state records. Those records are incomplete -- they don't include any Certificates issued by judges, which aren't tracked.

There are over 2,000,000 people with criminal records in New York, according to figures from the state's Division of Criminal Justice Services. Those are the people Certificates are meant to help.

There are about 6,050 pixels in that little black square, and about 2.2 million in the red square.
