TUITION INCREASE IS A REALITY

By Jonathan Lee

As of the Spring quarter of 1991, the tuition and fees for LaGuardia college students will be increased. Students residing in the city or state of New York will now pay $362.50 a quarter as full time students, $506.25 for part time students, and $25.00 for senior citizens. Out of state and International students will pay $506.25 for full time study and $76.00 for part time. All payments have to be made when student registers for classes and students should make arrangements for loans, grants and other forms of assistance with the Financial Aid office before registration.

Adam Mayer, Vice President of Student Government, believes tuition will increase again by the fall quarter. He said, "Tuition may increase by another $500 by the fall quarter in 1991, because the budget has to be balanced and it is on the back of CUNY students."

"The Chancellor is trying to end the decision that TAP would no longer help finance tuition and fee s for part time. All payments have to be made when student registers for classes and students should make arrangements for loans, grants and other forms of assistance with the Financial Aid office before registration."

Although the sign on MB31 of LaGuardia's main building may read "recreation, for its director Pamela Dinkins, things are far from just fun-n-games."

Dinkins, who has an undergraduate degree in Physical Education from Florida University and a Masters from New York University as a deafness rehabilitation specialist, spent five years in La Guardia's program for the deaf before entering the recreation department. Although now the head of the department, Dinkins still works regularly with disabled students and has several staff members who are deaf.

In the year that Dinkins has been with the recreation department there have been many changes. The staff has been upgraded and there have been a number of students added to the staff. To make things more efficient, all of the needed office supplies have been computerized to keep them both organized and easily accessible whenever needed. In Dinkins' office, a large flow chart covers nearly the entire wall above her desk. A "faculty schedule" that is upgraded quarterly tells what program is going on at each time of the day, what rooms are available, and where each member of the staff is working. Dinkins, who describes herself as a person who hates being bored, has added several new programs, as well. One of the new programs, "Players Choice," gives students a wide range of things to keep them busy. These activities run from a choice of board games, to basketball or ping-pong. According to Dinkins, students were skeptical at first about the new program, but she is pleased at the turnout. The new program that has proven the most successful so far is called "Aerobics for the really Busy." This program, which is offered three nights a week, allows people who aren't available during the day to get their necessary exercise. Dinkins has also required each member of the staff to take the classes given, such as weight training and aerobics in order for them to better help students in these areas.

Although Dinkins has been with the department for little more than a year, she describes it as a "family staff." Dinkins feels that the relaxed atmosphere makes it easier to work together. Many of the activities that the recreation department has done so far have been of benefit to others. This past Halloween, the recreation staff set the locker room up so it looked like a haunted house. The children from the Early Childhood Learning Center were given a special trick or treat tour. Over the Christmas holiday, toys were collected...
Welcome from the Editor-in-Chief

by Jonathan Lee

I would like to take the time to introduce myself to the college community. My name is Jonathan Lee, and I am a Liberal Arts student. I have been at the college for a little under two years. As editor in chief, I supervise the functioning of the Bridge, and make sure everything runs smoothly and on time.

Speaking not only for myself, but also for my sports editor, Donald McDermott, my photography editor, Alejandro Videla, and my features editor, Elena Pearson, we will try to bring relevant news that may affect, or be of interest to the people of this college community.

We have been told from various sources that editors in the past have been rather one way, mainly anti-administration. This is not our ambition. We will provide articles that represent the college and its members from different angles.

We hope your work is in progress. May your work always be for the progress of our club. Good luck to the candidates. Thanks for your support once again. We hope these efforts were beneficial.

Opinions expressed in the paper are not necessarily those of the college, administration, faculty, or student body. The Bridge is not responsible for unsolicited material.

Bridge Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

Many of us are tired of the horrors caused by the wimp-shedding George Bush and the footloose Saddam Hussein’s false attraction. These two devils have locked horns and it doesn’t seem that any amount of bottles can blass them apart. Yes, for a moment, we breathed a sigh of relief when Hussein offered a kind of “Kuwaitus Interruptus”. Of course, Bush dropped it as if it were a hot sour, raised another load of bombs, then rushed off to luxuriate at the “Patriot” missile factory.

He will not be satisfied until Hussein’s head is actually delivered staring in flaming oil to the Oval Office and, as the ultimate insult to Muslims, a pork chop stuffed in his mouth. Short of that, maybe he’ll settle for a bloody, ragged, severed wounded Hussein crawling and clutching at his feet and whimpering, “Oh, Massa of the New World Order, please don’t bomb me anymore, and I’ll just take my little saudis and go play in my sandbox”. Yet, Bush would love that, and he’d hope that any other would-be “Third World” despot—or liberator—would have learned that invasions and takeovers are the divine right and the exclusive privilege of racist, militarized, and imperialist regimes, one of which is ours own “incomparable foster daughter and permanent dependant” planted in the Middle East, itself.

Haitian Club

Thanks to all the members and friends of the Haitian Club for their support through my entire year of leading this club. Although it was not easy to fulfill everybody’s dream, we have done enough to satisfy the majority’s needs. Thanks for your support once again. We hope that our efforts were beneficial.

For the future, the club has to encounter now era of progress. Please make an effort, vote for any candidate you believe is desirable for the need of the club. We hope you do vote only regarding friendship, but of qualifications. Your effort will contribute a great deal to the future of the club. We hope your contribution will always be for the progress of our club. Good luck to the candidates.

Opinion: ID Cards: To Wear or Not To Wear?

by Jonathan Lee

Honestly, when I first heard that LaGuardia students and faculty members had to wear their identification cards, I thought the idea was absurd. Perhaps, I should say, I felt self-conscious about wearing it. I didn’t really care about my picture, but I felt degraded wearing it. Displaying my social security number and picture made me feel violated and somehow impersonal.

At first, I did not wear my card. I just kept it in it’s usual place, my wallet. After I had it punctured, I began to wear it. Then, as I feared, I came to the college without it, because I was so used to keeping it in the same place.

Anyway, I walked into the main building, and the SONY building with my card opened. No one stopped me to ask who I was and what I was doing there. I was sure that I am not the first and only person that this has happened to.

Of course, some people are wearing IDs, but as far as I can see, the majority are not. Yet these students and faculty do not seem against the idea. One student said, “I feel it makes me more like a true student of LaGuardia and I am more proud and confident in wearing it.” Another student believed that it is a good idea, because outsiders can be stopped. “It’s a form of protection for the students and faculty of LaGuardia,” he said. A college professor believes that everyone should wear it, including the faculty members.

Student President Elvis Bramble is grateful that some students and faculty are wearing the ID cards and helping prevent crime at the school. He believes the faculty can influence students, and the guards could be a little more involved in checking IDs and suspicious people. He feels comfortable as night when walking through the halls and the person approaching him is wearing an ID card. He hopes by spring all the students and faculty will be wearing their IDs.

Don’t get me wrong. I am not against the idea either. I am willing to wear my identification if it’s necessary. I don’t like the idea of an unwanted party entering our college, given the fact that a prison is right behind the main building.

Since security has began asking students to wear their ID upon entering the college more often, I feel safer now. The security could reinforce this action more by stopping students inside the college who are not wearing their identification, and ask the students their purpose here at LaGuardia. I realize (given budges case) there is a shortage of security at LaGuardia Community College, but it has to be tightened even further to help prevent crime.

Opinion: What Are We Thinking?

by Michael Suarez

One of the numerous problems of education (which inevitably affects society) is the fact that the educational system teaches "what" to think instead of "how" to think.

As a starting foundation we must recognize that most individuals if endowed with the capacity and will to memorize (at least and usually for a short period of time) whatever is presently being taught in the classroom will succeed in the educational system. This success is achieved and measured by examinations which ask simply that the individual repeat what has been dictated to him/her. This point is made not to diminish the importance of academic memorization. Memorization is the unavoidable essential first step of the learning process. What must be acknowledged is that it is not the only step. After we can accurately recall the information we must evaluate and use it. In this way we can look at the popular definition of success, which by
I sponsor its 3rd annual job fair. From 9:30 am to 4:30 pm in the Main Building.

The job fair will begin with a panel discussion in the Theater from 9:30 am to 5:00 pm. There will be representatives from IBM, Hyatt House Hotels, American International Group, the Federal Aviation Administration, and other public and private sector organizations who will share information about the current opportunities, obstacles, and trends in employment in their industry. Following the presentations, the discussion will be open to questions from students, faculty, staff, and alumni.

At 10:30 am immediately following the panel discussion, the Main Lobby will become an "employment opportunities marketplace" with booths staffed by recruiters who will collect resumes, provide information, and answer questions for students and alumni. Many recruiters will also schedule interviews for qualified applicants.

In order to insure that the job fair is successful for students and alumni, the Division of Cooperative Education will provide numerous opportunities for resume writing and interviewing preparation. A schedule of these preparation opportunities is available in the Job Placement Office, Room M200; the Cooperative Education Central Office, Room M204; the Library, Room M105; and the Career Resource and Transfer Center, Room MB65. For additional information about the job fair, contact Doreen Kollner at 482-5208, or Mickey Reyes on 482-5205.

Is This A Rude Awakening or What?

by Elena Pearson

Recently, I saw the film "Awakening or What?" directed by Penny Marshall (who can never be called Laverne again). The film, based on a true story, starred a very calm and subdued Robin Williams as Dr. Malcolm Sayer, a very calm and subdued Robin Williams of his miracle patients.

It's 1969 and Sayer has taken a job in the neurological disorders ward of a NY hospital. He discovers a group of patients that seem to be in a deep sleep for decades [Lowe being one of them]. Sayer is driven to find out why they're like this and after some investigation, he discovers that all of them had encephalitis, the sleeping disease of the 1920's.

After attending a medical convention, Sayer comes up with the idea of trying the experimental Parkinson's drug, L-dopa, but is only given a very small dose. Though, Sayer sneaks into the lab and prepares it himself one night. The film takes place, until the drug begins to cause side effects. Lowe begins trembling and shaking violently. Eventually, all the patients succeed to the side effects and return to their sleep-like state. There is one particularly sad scene where the 50th Lowe, after discovering the life he's missed and experiencing the joy of his brief freedom, is seen tearing postively as the nurse and his elderly mother fasten a diaper on him.

I was very touched by this film. It made me wonder if it was really worth it for all of the "sleepers" to be awakened to experience life, only to have it taken away from them again. I also wasn't able to decide if the Dr. Sayer character was a caring kind figure, giving his patients the miracle of life, disregarding the risks in favor of their brief happiness, or a man with a God complex, forthing them to what he thinks to be "alive," knowing it wouldn't last. Either way, the film was excellent.

Don't Forget the LaGuardia Job Fair is Coming--April 17th

Press Release

On Wednesday April 17, the Division of Cooperative Education at LaGuardia Community College will sponsor its 3rd annual job fair. Designed to bring LaGuardia students and alumni who are seeking employment together with recruiters from up to 50 companies, the job fair will run from 9:30 am to 4:30 pm in the Main Building.

The Greek Club & Politics

By Teruko Klein

When the Aphrodite Club was formed last spring, their main objective was to inform LaGuardia of an almost forgotten problem: the Turkish invasion and continued occupation of Cyprus since 1974. But their mission took on a new dimension when the US decided to provide military support to Kuwait.

What do Cyprus and Kuwait have in common? Ask Constant Veis, president of the Aphrodite Club, and he will tell you that "in both cases a UN resolution requested the immediate withdrawal of invading troops, yet in Kuwait the US provided military support almost immediately, while in Cyprus the US has done nothing to enforce this resolution though it has been 17 years since it was passed."

Veis explained that the 17 year old invasion and occupation is by itself acceptable, much more so by what he claims to be a double standard in the US foreign policies. This is a priority issue for the club whose membership is made up largely by students with Greek and Cypriot backgrounds. According to Veis there are currently 5 members who are refugees due to the Turkish invasion, and many who have suffered the consequences brought about by this progressing problem.

Veis explained that the club insists on getting some answers and finding a resolution to the Cyprus problem. "This does not necessarily mean that we are advocating war either in Cyprus or in the Persian Gulf. We simply demand a response to what we feel is a double standard," he added. A recent flyer published by the Aphrodite Club reads:

Since 1974 the US has remained insensitive to the Turkish invasion and occupation.

"In 1990 Iraq invaded Kuwait and occupied its territory. Similar to Cyprus, case, the United Nations requested the immediate withdrawal of Iraqi troops from Kuwait.

In this case the US sent its military machine to the middle east to "liberate" Kuwait.

At the same time the US supports and strengthens the invading forces of Turkey.

Why? On February 13, 1991, the Consul General of the Republic of Cyprus in New York, Mr. Elias Elades, came to LaGuardia to address the Cyprus problem and answer questions. When discussing the Gulf War as compared with Cyprus, Mr. Elades stated that "We are not asking anyone to go to war for us; God forbid! We only demand that the UN resolutions concerning the Turkish invasion be implemented," adding that "justice is blind."

Informing the school community of this conflict is the primary goal of the Aphrodite Club at this time, and the main motivation behind uniting to form the club, says Veis, "we came together to get to know one another, to exchange ideas and to inform students of issues they might not otherwise be aware of." He explained that "We want people to know that Cyprus is not a tree, a fruit or an ice cream, but an independent Republic member of the UN with a problem that should concern not only Cypriots, but everyone who believes in equal
Gay and Lesbian Faculty Association Created at LaGuardia

by Elena Pearson

You may not realize it, but every day in this country an entire segment of our population is ridiculed, discriminated against, excluded from mainstream media and basically rendered invisible. This is 1991, you might say. There are laws to protect people from discrimination based on gender, race or ethnic background. Still the segment of our population that is subjected to this unfairness is the Gay and Lesbian population and some at the college are expressing their concerns about this.

According to Leonard Vogt, an English Professor at LaGuardia, the Gay and Lesbian faculty at the college were feeling excluded from the Pluralism efforts at the school and came to the conclusion that the only way to be more recognized by the Pluralism Task Force was to be more recognized in general. Hence, the Gay and Lesbian Faculty Association was formed — not only for faculty, but for all Gays and Lesbians at the college.

Two years ago, an attempt to start a Gay and Lesbian student club was met with graffiti, torn down posters, name calling at the door of the meeting room and hidden government coming in with cameras, according to Professor Vogt.

The following dialogue exchange was compiled from several interviews with the members of the Gay and Lesbian Faculty Association of LaGuardia/Community College. Unfortunately, THE BRIDGE wasn't able to include every member of the group and, due to space limitations, all answers had to be edited. (The Bridge invites the college community to respond to the issues raised in this interview by simply forwarding letters and written comments to our office—S154. Responses will be printed in the Spring '91 issue.)

The noon meeting of the discussion was: Sarah Barber, Associate Professor of English; Lenore Beaky, Professor of English and former president of Firebrands, a running club for Gays and Lesbians of all abilities; Mark Blasius, Professor of Social Science, who did his dissertation on Gay and Lesbian Politics.

Professor Leonard Vogt (photograph: Alejandro Videla)

In my case, it was negative because when it became common knowledge in my department that I was gay, I lost my job. I wasn't reappointed. It was on appeal to the college president that I got my job back.

THE BRIDGE: What do you feel is the biggest problem or obstacle, facing gay and Lesbian student at LaGuardia?

BARBER: Invisibility. I think of all minority populations, gay people get dumped on the most. I have found with my students, and this has been painful. For example, I showed a movie in my class called "Stiff Burning" which is about cultural stereotyping on college campuses and various students from various groups talked about how it felt to have ugly words said to them and jokes made about them. These students were Asian, Black and Hispanic. But then a gay student talked about the pain of hearing terrible remarks by fellow students and even by faculty, and my students started to laugh. When I asked them why they laughed when the gay student spoke, they said, "But that's different, we wouldn't even say stuff in the cafeteria with a gay student.

I realized the incredible homophobia in this college and it hurt. I can imagine what it feels like to be that student — to know that this part of my life, I must keep secret because it will be the butt of ridicule and homophobic remarks from fellow students. Adolescence and early twenties are very difficult at best and to have to hide this part of yourself is very painful.

BEAKY: Just being open. A lot of students here are quite conservative. Some come from cultures which are particularly homophobic and so they feel that they have to stay in the closet and hide. It's a burden.

BARBER: Visibility. I think of all minority populations, gay people get Gay and Lesbian Association from p.4

AMANNICK: I don’t think there are many students at all that are openly gay or Lesbian. They keep it to themselves and I think that’s one of the reasons why I hope more teachers do come out because they get to make the point that it doesn’t have to be a terrible, sudden secret; there’s really nothing wrong with being gay or Lesbian, and let students know that, so they can feel better about themselves.

VOGT: It seems on one hand as though there’s more and more publicity for gay and Lesbian issues in terms of more people being out, but the reaction against that has been very strong as the cases of violence against gays and Lesbians have become rampant. It has increased by something like 100% in the last couple of years. A prime example for us living here in Queens is that very recently a young man named Julio Rivera was murdered with a hammer. Even on a less obvious level are the gay and Lesbian students that are silent in the classroom and who don’t hear themselves represented at all in any kind of class discussion. They are going to be wounded students. People would not be as overt about things that are racist or sexist as they would be homophobic, perhaps because the great percentage of gays and Lesbians are not recognizable as gay and Lesbian, whatever that may mean. That means they can be ignored much more easily than women or people of racial difference.

THE BRIDGE: Now that the Gay and Lesbian Faculty Association has been formed and is standing up to be recognized, what are some of the plans you have to help gay and Lesbian students at the college and who don’t have some of the things you personally would like to see done?

BEAKY: A group of us are going to make a presentation to the faculty members around the ways in which gay and Lesbian issues can be infused into the curriculum and what kind of needs gay students have. Also, student counselling concerns me. Do students have a place in advisement and in counseling where they can go? Another one of the things we’ve been talking about is putting together a reading and a list on gay issues. I had thought of a library display for June, which is our month [Gay Pride Month] to raise everyone’s awareness.

BLASISUS: This interview is an important occasion for visibility so that Lesbian and gay students know that they are not alone and can have some role models. In addition, we, the faculty association, are meeting with the Pluralism Task Force to discuss ways to infuse Lesbian and gay concerns into the curriculum and to try to raise consciousness about the existence of Lesbians and gays and the problem of homophobia at the college.

BARBER: For gay students who are suffering from such enormous prejudice, especially on campus, seeing an openly gay faculty member is an incredibly blessed thing… I think you also have to look at the faculty and the staff at the college. I’m not convinced that they are free of homophobia themselves. So I think that faculty and staff need to have workshops, sensitivity training and exposure to gay people.

VOGT: The first thing is to have this interview in the newspaper so that the college, as a whole, is aware that we do have a group, that we want ourselves to be prominent, that we want to be seen by students and faculty as a group of people who are proud of being gay and Lesbian and want to be out and open to the college. We want to be a role model for gay and Lesbian students who would like someone to come and speak to if they’re having problems or they just need to talk about being gay. We also want straight faculty to be aware that they too should try to incorporate gay and Lesbian issues into their classroom.

THE BRIDGE: Is there anything else you’d like to add, particularly to any gay or Lesbian students reading this?

BARBER: For students, the subject of heterosexuality must be brought up in all kinds of classes, in English classes and certainly in Social Science classes. Students need to be able to voice their own fears, in a classroom with an instructor who will be sensitive and also, perhaps open some doors. That’s the beginning.

BEAKY: I hope that gay and Lesbian students who are reading this will feel that they can come to us so that we can get to know who we are here. If they’re interested in forming an organization for themselves, we’re here. If they have any other problems or issues or needs, we’d be glad to help and work with them on it.

VOGT: In terms of the multi-cultural nature of LaGuardia, when we have students who may be having problems because of being gay or Lesbian, this student’s experience is equally important as the sexism or racism a student might experience.

Prelude To The 100-Hour Battle: The People Debate Pros and Cons of Death In The Sand

By Sherlene Marino

At a time of conflict, tension and fear, pride and hatred, opposition and support, are just a few of the emotions that are felt by those affected. The war, they say, is over. The memories, though, of all that has happened and the fear of it happening again are far from being over.

For many of us, a real war was only something we read about in history books or saw in old movies. For many of us the realization that we've just been in a war has not even hit yet and for others, it has hit all too hard.

This war tore the country apart in ideology. There are those of us who believe democracy must be upheld and we have a responsibility to do so. They believe a man like Saddam Hussein must be stopped at any cost. There are others who believe that the problem is not worth the cost of innocent lives; that the issue is not about democracy, but about oil and money.

Those who opposed the war may have been outnumbered, but they were far from silent. A large number of peace rallies, throughout the country, and in fact, the world, were organized and carried out in order to get their message heard.

One of several rallies here in N.Y. was held on January 17. It started at Times Square and went all the way to Washington Square Park in Greenwich Village. The crowds started to gather well before 5pm and began moving down 6th avenue an hour after.

The turnout was huge and security was high. Police on foot, motorcycle, and horseback "escorted" and controlled the crowd of marchers. Emotions were high. Chants were heard from, "No Blood For Oil!", to the traditional, "What Do We Want? Peace! When Do We Want It? Now!", to the harsh, "Send In George Bush! Send In Dan Quayle! Send In Neil Bush When He Gets Out Of Jail!

The people on the sidewalk who were not part of the rally stood for a while watching the crowd pass by. Some would clap and chant as well, showing and giving additional support. Others, though few, did express opposition to the anti-war protestors. One man shouted into the crowd, "If you don't like what's happening in this country, leave! No one is tiring a chain to your ass to keep you here!!" Still others went about their business as best they could just as if it were another day.

The peace rally had its share of non-peaceful situations. One man, standing alone on the side of the street by the parked cars, held a sign saying, "I support the U.S. troops." A swarm of protestors gathered around him screaming, yelling, asking him why he took that position. The man stood, saying nothing at first. With tears in his eyes, in a voice barely heard over the crowd, he told a reporter that his friend is over in the Gulf and that he doesn't want him to die so he supports his friend all the way. After a while of trying to argue with this man who wouldn't fight back, the crowd moved on.

The marching, the chanting, the people, the police, and some onlookers turned followers, all stopped and gathered at Washington Square Park. The crowd nearly filled the entire park. People climbed in trees, light poles, each other, and anything else that would get them a better view of what was going on. Several speakers on various sides of the park spoke through megaphones. They spoke of their continuing effort to keep on fighting, and the plans for further protests, including, two upcoming rallies in the country.

Some would clap and chant as well, showing and giving additional support. Others, though few, did express opposition to the anti-war protestors. One man shouted into the crowd, "If you don't like what's happening, leave the country." Anyway. All the troops aren't back yet and some will never be. Along with the emotional, physical, political and economic damages suffered by Iraq and Kuwait, their or the emotional damages. These, experts say, have had, and will have, a greater impact than the immediate results of the war, and will continue for years to come.

Those who protested wanted the war to end. The end may have come, but for how long will there be peace?

"Send In George Bush! No blood for oil! No blood....."

"If you don't like what's happening, leave the country."

"We are at war so we don't end up with a Hitler........"

"We should not fight for greedy oil companies...

A WAR SURVEY

By Teruko Klein

Since January and the onslaught of war in the Persian Gulf, opinions about the war have been as heated as they are diverse. Almost everyone has something to say about war, but if you haven't noticed, not everyone is saying the same thing. What are we fighting for? Should we go to war? What would your solution to the Persian Gulf crisis be?

These were the three questions asked of over 100 LaGuardia students before the war ended. Though these 100 students are not meant to represent the LaGuardia community as a whole, you may be interested and surprised by what these students had to say.

What Would Your Solution To The Persian Gulf Crisis Be?

It is nearly impossible to report the full scope of individual responses to this question. But at large, student's solutions to the Gulf War ranged from stopping the war now (majority opinion), to fighting until Hussein and his army are destroyed (minority opinion).

Over all, the more commonly expressed opinions were: 1) We should have waited longer for economic sanctions to work. 2) The UN should hold a peace conference including the Israeli/Palestinian issue. 3) If we are fighting for oil, it is not worth the loss of human life.

What else did students have to say? Here are some samples of student responses.

"We are fighting because we need to use all of the extra weapons built in the Reagan era." Anonymous

"We should not fight for greedy oil companies or George Bush's ego!" James Walsh, student.

"If the US is at war because of Kuwait, let them fight in Kuwait instead of bombing civilians in Baghdad." Anonymous social standards is the accumulation of monetary wealth. It follows that happiness which is derived from this success is defined as what we can do with monetary wealth. Enter the individual who has learned what, but not how, to think. This individual accepts these definitions of success and happiness and sets a goal to achieve them. Questions such as why these are the definitions or if the definitions hold any validity remain unasked and unanswered.

This essay was not written to promote the rejection of the ideas, beliefs and attitudes we come into ourselves as well as our society.

Dinkins from p1

By the recreation staff and given by the Louise Wise Services in Manhattan for residents of the mother-baby program

At the end of May, Dinkins will be involved in the New York State games for the physically challenged. The games, which are in their sixth year, are open to all disabilities. The annual event lasts from Thursday to Sunday and this past year, among the thousand of children in attendance were disabled children from Ireland. One of the special events held was a celebrity wheelchair competition which, according to Dinkins, brought a large turnout from many different people including Governor Mario Cuomo.

Aside from keeping up on both present and future programs, Dinkins has the task of renting out the gym for special events. According to Dinkins, this can often be a problem because along with La Guardia, the gym is also used by both Middle College and the International High Schools. The gym is often needed by different groups for rehearsals, parties, and tournaments. When this occurs, Dinkins requests three different dates. This will allow for compromise in case one of the dates, which are often reserved months in advance, is not available.

With the impending budget cuts and the opening of the new building next year, there may be many changes ahead for the recreation department.

Dinkins commented that, "We will have to wait and see; for now, time is on our side."

justice.

When asked why he feels that informing people will help to the Cyprus problem Veis said that "the more people know about this issue and demand some answers, the more politicians will be forced to listen and do something about it." At present the club feels that their efforts have been successful, as students have been responsive and some professors have raised the issue in class discussions.

Aiming to bring a variety of ethnic groups, the Aphrodite Club welcomes all students to attend the weekly meetings, Wednesdays at 1:20 in room 5125. Those students who may wish to join the club are expected to participate in activities when they are able.

Poetry from p9

but the hand of fate
dug a hole in my path
I fell in that hole
The soil imprisoned me
The skies did not rain
if it had only rained a bit
Now I'm a swarm
a half-dead prisoner of the soil
I either get absorbed by the earth or vaporize to the sky
The sun from above and the earth from below destroy me at will for this is the story of my life
My death is imminent
There is no escape from my destiny
I am, the prisoner of this earth
There is not much left of me
I've reached my last drops and I shall dry than die
When the sun rises tomorrow and for many tomorrows to come the desert sand shall replace me and the sand shall be gone with the wind...

Basketball from p12

Feeling confident over their two consecutive wins, Ms. Dinkins issued an open challenge to anyone who wants to play her staff. As the event drew to an end Ms. Dinkins posed with her team for a picture. Before it was taken she asked, "Who is our favorite team?" The simultaneous answer was "security!"

Hull from p12

(88-89) Hull scored forty-one goals. With encouragement from Blues coach Brian Sutter, Hull returned extensively over the summer and lost ten pounds for the start of next season. Hull went on to score a league leading seventy-two goals last season. That accomplishment had made Hull one of eleven players to score more than sixty goals in a single season. This season, with just over a month left, Hull again leads the NHL with sixty-eight goals. Along with his thirty-five assists, Hull is second on the list of scorers, behind only Gretzky who has one Hundred-twenty six. Hull's continuing contributions have helped to bring the Blues, who once trailed by nine points, to the top of the Norris division.

Hull's sixty-eight goals put him on route to a possible fourth place on the all-time list for goals in a season, behind Lemieux's eighty-five in the 1988-89 season, and Gretzky's eighty-seven in the 1983-84 season and a record ninety-two goals in the 1981-82 season. Hull's achievements also make him the leading candidate for the Hart award, given to the NHL's most valuable player.

Giants from p12

Leonard Marshall's key hit on future hall of famer Joe Montana in the N.F.C. championship could be heard all across New York. The incomparable ten-year all pro, Lawrence Taylor is still being double teamed, that's respect. No matter what Bruce Smith says, when Taylor was in his prime he was the best linebacker in any period of time. Linebacker Pepper Johnson had a heavy load placed on his shoulders when Banks was injured. He may not be Taylor, but he proved he can hold his own in a goal line stand, even without his teammate. Veteran Carl Banks was accused of being rusty due to missing most of the season with a wrist injury. When he came back it was like he was never gone. Since the infamous "catch" of 1981 while still with the Cowboys, Everson Walls was looked at by many as a washed up cover man in the secondary. What people tend to forget is that this game is all second nature to him. He knows when a receiver will cut before the receiver does. Then there's Muyron Guyton, the youngest of the Giants defense. This is a player who accomplished the impossible by keeping Andre Reed from going deep. This is also a man who can fit like a train, just ask Rod Gauen, in his second year is already being called the next Ronnie Lott.

Although Otis Anderson was awarded the M.V.P. in Super Bowl twenty-five with the Giants 20-19 victory over the seemingly unstoppable Buffalo Bills, it was the defense that got them there in the first place. The defense allowed an average of only two touchdowns a game in the regular season. With an average of six yards passing per play, and four yards rushing, opponents worked hard for their first downs. As far as the Giants defense is concerned, their performance was simply "Super!"
Dear Elena,

Letters to Elena
Dear Elena,

I am dating a most wonderful, charming and sensitive man. There is nothing wrong with our relationship.

The problem lies with the fact that his ex-girlfriend shows up everywhere we go. I did not perceive this as a problem in the beginning and I thought it was just pure coincidence. But, it turns out that she is "hounding" him because she wants him back. He has told her, and me, that he is no longer interested in her, but she insists that she still loves him but just doesn't realize it yet. She told him that she will continue to hang around us until he decides to go back to her. This will never happen because he has proposed to me, though I am afraid to accept it (I do want to), but I fear I may never get rid of her and things will progressively get worse. Right now she is just a harmless pest, but I fear that she may do want to, but I fear I may never get rid of her and things will progressively get worse. Right now she is just a harmless pest, but I fear that she may

Please advise me.

"The professors know me as a student, not as a number."

Why did you choose Manhattan College? "I looked at some colleges that had 200 or 300 kids in a class, looking at a TV screen to listen to a lecture. Manhattan has an average of 20 to 30 kids in a class." What do you think of the professors? "The professors knew our names by the second week of school. And they tell us to call anytime if we have a problem."

Hooray! Hooray! LaGuardia Sports Are Back in a Big Way!

COLLEGE HANDBALL CHAMPS NET TROPHIES

By Donald McDermott

On February 5th, LaGuardia held a coed doubles handball tournament. The tournament, open to all male and female LaGuardia competitors, is held each term in the school's gym.

Each of the opening rounds of the tournament consisted of one game of twenty-one points. The finals was a two out of three competition and each player was game played until one team scored fifteen points.

The first of the two semi-final matches pitted Andres Garcia and Stacey Walley against Kenneth Roberts and Tony Susswell. Roberts, a tournament veteran, has played in several of LaGuardia's singles and doubles tournaments. With experience in both singles and doubles competition, Roberts says that he has no preference to either type of play. While trailing by four points, Walley and Garcia tied the game at nine points. Walley walked off the court in a fit of frustration, she resumed minutes later, but the tension was still there between the two teammates and Susswell and Roberts advanced to the finals by a score of twenty-one to eight.

The second of the semi-finals, and the most exciting game of the day placed Yogi Gounden and Nelson Vergara against Charles Washington and Keruth Saxton. The match stayed roughly a point apart early in the match. It was clear that each team was hungry to win as every point had to be earned. Players lunging, diving, and making near impossible backward shots were common in this match. Washington and Saxton scored to be the more dominating team as they broke away late with a twenty to seventeen lead. Although Sexton had been one of only two women in the entire tournament, she proved to be as good, if not better than any of the male players. Only a point away from victory, it looked to be over for the team of Gounden and Vergara, but they refused to give up and slowly began to chip away at what had once appeared to be a more formidable foe. Gounden and Vergara managed to tie the game, and in a dramatic "do or die" situation, emerged victorious and advanced to the final round.

Although the finals, a two out of three match, started out close, Roberts and Susswell began to become too much for their opponents and won the first match by a score of fifteen to nine. Down by a game, Gounden and Vergara proved to be no match for Susswell and Roberts, losing the second match by a disappointing thirteen points. When asked if he was bothered by the comparsion of the tournament, a victorious Roberts replied, "Not really, if they really want competition it should be open to other schools.

Trophies will be presented at the end of the term to Susswell and Roberts. Gounden and Vergara will receive medals for their second place finish.

BASKETBALL GAME PLAYED IN MEMORY OF LAGUARDIA'S CAPTAIN ROBERT MORRIS

By Donald McDermott

February 22nd marked the long awaited return match between La Guardia's recreation staff and security staff. The first meeting, in the fall quarter, had the recreation staff victorious by a score of 49-37.

In a nearly sold out gymnasium on Friday the 22nd, the security staff attempted to even out the loss they had suffered a term before. The game was being played in memory of Robert Morris, the former security captain at La Guardia who had died a month ago. Morris' family was in attendance and all proceeds went to his family. Although the tenacious fans of the security staff wanted to favor the recreation staff, the security was determined to play their hardest and emerge victorious.

Unfortunately for the security players, the end result was much like the first game. In a largely one-sided victory, the recreation staff won by a score of 71-39.

With the recreation department's director, Pamela Dickens, calling instructions from the sidelines, his staff dominated the entire game. They had almost complete control of possession time, and seemed unbeatable with their zone defense. Not to mention the mobile defense that deserves most of the credit.

It was clear that each team was playing hard, even when trailing by more than ten points, didn't seem to have the players capable of stopping the recreation department. The security staff had been plagued by penalties from the start and their shooters seemed to be having an extremely off night. The only standout for the security staff was Gary Sculler, who had 8 points and LaGuardia's guard, the game's only female starter, who had 6 points.

Super Giants

By Charlie Bresnich

Although the Giants exciting victory in Super Bowl twenty-five will be forever remembered for the offense, people often forget that it is the defense that deserves most of the credit.

The Giants emerge as Super Bowl champions in a season filled with high powered offenses. Things like the run-shoot, the no huddle, and hurry up offenses sent defensive coordinators running to game films week after week trying to figure out these offensive schemes. Not to mention the mobile quarterbacks and the mobile likes arms that lead a team to victory. It was offense that led the Giants to their first super bowl victory and here they are again five years later, back in the thick of things, although this time it was just more defense. Hull Parcel once said that, "Power whips football games", personally, it wasn't god that won super bowl twenty-five, defense did.

Remember that Giants Like Taylor, Walls, Marshall and Starkes are all veterans of the grid-iron, and who knows how much longer they'll be able to play. Maybe aged men and football don't go well together in this league, especially when old injuries start creeping up on them. However each of these men played a significant part in the Giants road to the Super Bowl.
