Summer Farm School
To Enroll B.C. Students

To meet the acute farm labor shortage, preliminary registration has begun for the Brooklyn College summer farm school, the State Agricultural and Technical Institute, located at Morrisville, New York. Because the school can accommodate only 200 students, applications must be filed in the Placement Office before next Thursday.

Students will pick such vegetables as peas and string beans, and will be paid a minimum wage of $7 a week. Current piece-work rates are $3.50 a day; for an average of eight hours, depending on weather conditions. Everyone is expected to remain at the farm site from June 15 to September 15.

Living expenses of the college farm workers will be one dollar a day, including room and board at the school dormitories and cafeteria. Transportation to and from Morrisville will be provided by the state.

Prescribed Courses

Everyone must carry one 3 or 4 credit course under one of the following headings: prescribed Freshman or Sophomore courses, war service courses, or courses related to farming such as Geology 1, or Farm Biology. The same fees will be paid at the summer school as in Brooklyn College.

Qualifications needed to attend the farm school are satisfactory completion of at least one semester at B.C., excellent health, good work habits, and the ability to adjust oneself to the requirements of group living.
