College Group Set For Farm Duties

Beans and peas will be harvested by 160 students of Brooklyn College who leave tomorrow for Morrisville, N. Y., where they will begin a work-study program. According to Prof. Ralph C. Benedict, director of the farm project, the students are eager to learn of farm life.

They will work on the farms during the daytime and in the evening will attend college classes, with the opportunity of adding to their college credits.

Last year Professor Benedict headed a similar project when he took 100 students from four city colleges to an up-State farm camp.
