Brooklyn College Plan Runs Into Some Difficulties

By R. C. Benedict, Director

The first three weeks are the hardest! Some such expression has been used by many in connection with the new venture which Brooklyn College and the Institute here at New York have launched. Hard rains for three Mondays in a row, poor picking in the pea crop, and consequently, poor earnings; all the variety of difficulties incident to starting a new venture. For the students, sunburn, lame muscles, minor aches and pains, summer complaint for a few, etc., etc. More surprising, perhaps, is the very small proportion which they have borne to the general operation.

If the positive values were to be summarized and tabulated, the list would be so imposing that the poor rains and the pea crop would seem insignificant. We have lost one student, James Manalacos who had been planning to make some money. An older brother drafted to the Army, it is necessary for Jim to get larger earning power and bring in at least $25.00 or more per week which he had left to come in, earnings which are, however, not likely to continue in college in the fall. Mitt Rosenberg is due to leave us in the middle of the term. Without his induction call. With a bad interlude for two or three days, the remainder of the group has even talked about going home.

On the positive side have been the opportunities, both as students and as leaders, for development in several fields. Academically, our class work is past the third month, and we have been getting the routines in hand. But, for Sociology and for Political Science, the semester has been a series of routines, sometimes long, sometimes short, sometimes far beyond what is considered to be the regular subject participation, and sometimes with a varied interest. This week Dr. T. Wood Clarke, physician, geologist, and historian, spoke on the entrances of white men into Central New York; Iroquois Marilyn Davis participated with a solo. The week after, the State Comptroller Frank C. Moor will speak on "Local Government," and the following week the Gardeners of Brooklyn and also of Cornell.

On the third assembly, July 16, the students were paid from the Edward Everett Hort Fund. Four teams were chosen and each one was paid a small amount of a bushel more for any one team which would have changed the result of the previous week. Second prize, G. Marvin Thall, captain and Beverley Shapiro, Co-captain, and the third prize, Mildred Ribakoff and Estelle Benfield, Co-captains. The Hort Fund was awarded by a general contender essentially tied with them. Also, this new tops in the Hort Fund was awarded by a general contender essentially tied with them. Two new members arrived from Brooklyn for shorter terms of enrolment, Bernice Gunther, and Barnard, Education Dept. made two helpful stops within a week. The Auron, Education Dept. has come for a short stay. Mr. Alex Friedlander, of the Public Relations Office, is here for a month of vacation. All such visits are immediately put to use to help us get our hands on spend their days in the baseball fields, and his evenings in help.

Mr. Fluishor, in addition to his mathematics class, his bird walks, etc. He has come to teach a class in "The Primates of Men." Sometime during the coming two weeks we can expect to see Mr. T. Wood Clarke showing film pictures, taken in Mexico, in the Utah Canyons, in the North, and in the desert. Mr. E. Welzink, who has travelled in Ecuador, will be ready to talk about his experience. These talks are illustrated, hence the interest. Incidentally, these illustrated talks will be available from the Institute for other group which may be interested.

Special classes by Institute faculty will be in the form of talks on Boils by Mr. Howlett and on Pasteurization, by Mr. Hail. Other such talks is planned to include the phases of agronomy, the standards of industrial Economic by Dr. Galbreath and general agricultural economics by Mr. Hail. The latter series, smaller group, should have a chance to handle far more material. Recreational and social activities have been noted. A new "Men's Group," with swimming, hot dog roasting, and various other fixins' has allocated the time so as to allow the affable effective Square dance lessons and practically anything. Square dance lessons and practically anything. Mr. T. Wood Clarke, physician, and his women members the early part of the week. The students were expected to be continued. The Sunday service at the United Church at a local church on quarter in the loft with Phyllis Leinaw, contra, singing Ave Maria, and a concert. We are to be likely to demand a full crew most Sundays for the rest of the term.
