College President Sees Students At Farm Work

Special to the Brooklyn Eagle

Morrisville, N. Y., Sept. 7—President Harry D. Gideonse of Brooklyn College spent the day yesterday in the fields with 100 of his students who have been engaged in farm work here since June.

Last night President Gideonse addressed the group and reminded the students that Brooklyn College had led the way as an institution in supplying agricultural labor for the farm emergency. Elsewhere students enlisted in the land corps as individuals, he said, but the college for two years had made the project an institutional one, as part of the regular academic routine.

“The co-operation of Brooklyn College, a large city institution, with the Technical and Agricultural Institute in Morrisville, is a fruitful model for such developments throughout the State and country,” he said.
