Open Season for Oysters in the Crow's Nest

Walter Holman, his name an almost household word in the city of Milton Lichtenthal, was the object of curiosity to a number of students yesterday. The question was, what was he doing in the Crow's Nest? The answer was, he was there to draw the attention of students to the upcoming basketball season, which was expected to be the best in years.

Holman, who is a member of the Milton Lichtenthal basketball team, was at the same time a contender for the presidency of the Upper Junior class. His presence in the Crow's Nest was not accidental, for he was there to promote his candidacy for president, which he did with great success.

Holman spoke on the importance of the basketball season, and how it would affect the school. He also spoke on the need for increased attendance at basketball games, and how it would benefit the school as a whole.

After his speech, Holman signed autographs for a number of students, who eagerly waited in line to get his signature. He then left the Crow's Nest, having successfully promoted his candidacy for president.

The basketball season is expected to begin next week, and Holman is hoping to win the presidency to help promote his team.

Dean Moore Hints On 'How to Study'

Dean Moore, the head of the student body, spoke on the topic of 'How to Study.' He emphasized that students should take advantage of the resources available to them, such as tutors and study groups. He also encouraged students to use their time effectively, by setting aside specific times for studying.

Moore also spoke on the importance of taking care of their physical health, such as getting enough sleep and eating a healthy diet. He emphasized that students should not neglect their health in order to study.

Moore concluded his speech by reminding students that they are responsible for their own success, and that they should take the initiative to make sure they are prepared for their exams.

Exiled Attorney Denounces Cuban Military Regime

In a speech to the American Youth World, an exiled Cuban attorney denounced the Cuban military regime. He spoke on the importance of democracy, and how it is being suppressed in Cuba.

The attorney also spoke on the need for international intervention to stop the regime from続行ing its illegal activities. He emphasized that the world must stand up to the regime, and not allow it to continue its illegal activities.

The attorney concluded his speech by expressing hope that the Cuban people will soon be able to live in freedom, and that the regime will be overthrown.
An Old Story

The paragraphs unfolding below will receive a story as one of the most significant in itself, and as dry as milk's decanter the morning after an Advertiser's banquet.

 Tradition and yawned editorial columns dictate that the tragedy: the web of politics and the long and shortcomings of college politics on the eve of every election. Today, the College Council, in the spirit of the times, at the risk of offending the powers-there-would-be, we think that it is about time somebody started a revolution, one for the "depressed." The first step—the revolution would be in the press, a prospective Student Council from the highest flagpoles available, so that the student electorate would at last be impelled to raise their eyes from books and cocoes and see the world through their own eyes at the polls on election day. Some will decry this sensation, others will acclaim it. We are interested in our Council elections, but every short of murder has been tried in the past without effect. Only last week a full-scale assembly was held at the suggestion of the promise of little more than an election. Student and student—rather emasculated, that is. In our midst, however, who still see the hope for political reform at the College. The "Ticketer" will only be happily dedicated to the seemingly futile attempt to create a truly representative Student Council. Regrettably, we know that this semester lost the cause of change, because today as tomorrow, the student-voters will invite that parlor game involving a jackass, a pail, and a ballot box to select their Council and Class officers.

The future, if only still,
