8-12-2016

Study abroad scholarships a good use of taxes.

Aldemaro Romero Jr.
CUNY Bernard M Baruch College

How does access to this work benefit you? Let us know!
Follow this and additional works at: https://academicworks.cuny.edu/bb_pubs

Part of the Higher Education Commons

Recommended Citation
Romero, A. 2016al. Study abroad scholarships a good use of taxes. The Edwardsville Intelligencer 22 August 2016, p. 3.

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Baruch College at CUNY Academic Works. It has been accepted for inclusion in Publications and Research by an authorized administrator of CUNY Academic Works. For more information, please contact AcademicWorks@cuny.edu.
There is little doubt that an international experience is one of the most life-changing events for a college student. That is what one hears from students when they return, particularly from those who have never even been abroad in their lives. Cost is usually mentioned as the major barrier for Americans to have such experiences. And that is a burden that can be particularly high for people of color.

Yet, there is a little known but very successful federal scholarship, the Gilman Scholarship Program, which is designed to meet the need for local and state universities to support the study abroad needs of students who have not had the opportunity to take part in this experience due to financial constraints. The program is being funded to support the study abroad needs of many students who have not been able to participate in previous study abroad programs because of the cost. The program was established in 2001 by the U.S. Department of State and is administered by the Institute of International Education. The program is designed to support the need for increased diversity among study abroad participants. The program provides funding for the study abroad needs of students from non-selective institutions. The program provides funding for the need for increased diversity among study abroad participants. The program provides funding for the study abroad needs of students from non-selective institutions.

The program is designed to meet the need for local and state universities to support the study abroad needs of students who have not had the opportunity to take part in this experience due to financial constraints. The program was established in 2001 by the U.S. Department of State and is administered by the Institute of International Education. The program is designed to support the need for increased diversity among study abroad participants. The program provides funding for the study abroad needs of students from non-selective institutions. The program provides funding for the need for increased diversity among study abroad participants. The program provides funding for the study abroad needs of students from non-selective institutions.

The program is designed to meet the need for local and state universities to support the study abroad needs of students who have not had the opportunity to take part in this experience due to financial constraints. The program was established in 2001 by the U.S. Department of State and is administered by the Institute of International Education. The program is designed to support the need for increased diversity among study abroad participants. The program provides funding for the study abroad needs of students from non-selective institutions. The program provides funding for the need for increased diversity among study abroad participants. The program provides funding for the study abroad needs of students from non-selective institutions.