9-2011

Review of the book Fifty key thinkers on the Holocaust and genocide

John A. Drobnicki
CUNY York College

How does access to this work benefit you? Let us know!

Follow this and additional works at: http://academicworks.cuny.edu/yc_pubs

Part of the European History Commons, Jewish Studies Commons, and the Library and Information Science Commons

Recommended Citation

This Book Review is brought to you for free and open access by the York College at CUNY Academic Works. It has been accepted for inclusion in Publications and Research by an authorized administrator of CUNY Academic Works. For more information, please contact AcademicWorks@cuny.edu.

Bartrop (Bialik College, Melbourne), coauthor of Dictionary of Genocide with S. Totten (CH, Jun’08, 45-5360), and Jacobs (Univ. of Alabama), coeditor of Confronting Genocide with M. I. Sherman (CH, Feb’10, 47-3096), have selected the 50 “key thinkers” in the relatively young fields of Holocaust and genocide studies. They take pains in the introduction to stress that those included are not necessarily the “best” (though some are), but rather individuals who have had sustained careers and whose writings have expanded the parameters of their fields. Entries average about six pages and provide biographical and critical information, brief illustrative excerpts from writings, a list of the author’s major writings, and short reference lists. They are divided about equally between the Holocaust and genocide, and include historians, political scientists, sociologists, theologians, anthropologists, and literary scholars. Somewhat more than half were born in the US, but also included are representatives from Europe, Asia, Africa, Oceania, and the Middle East. Arguing with the choice of who was included is difficult, but the prominent names left out, e.g., Donald Kenrick and Richard Lukas, make one wish the book were not limited to 50. Summing Up: Recommended. ★★ Lower-level undergraduates through researchers/faculty.—J. A. Drobnicki, York College, CUNY