The Brooklyn College building program, which has been described as one of the largest in the country, is scheduled to be completed by next September. The new college will be ready for occupancy on the first of September, and the first term will be opened on the 15th of September.

The college will be divided into five departments: arts and sciences, business administration, education, engineering, and music. The arts and sciences department will offer courses in mathematics, physics, chemistry, biology, and economics. The business administration department will offer courses in accounting, business law, and business administration. The education department will offer courses in elementary and secondary education. The engineering department will offer courses in civil, mechanical, and electrical engineering. The music department will offer courses in music theory, composition, and performance.

The college will have a capacity of 7,500 students in each term, and the enrollment is expected to reach 10,000. The college will offer a wide range of courses, including both undergraduate and graduate programs.

The college will be located on forty acres of land in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn, and the construction of the college buildings is progressing rapidly. The landscaping of the campus is also being speeded up to ensure that the college will be ready for the opening of the fall term.

The new college will be a significant addition to the educational opportunities available in Brooklyn and the surrounding area. The college will be open to students of all races and backgrounds, and the college will be committed to providing a high-quality education to all students who meet the admissions requirements.

The opening of the college is expected to be a major event in the history of Brooklyn and the surrounding area. The college will be a symbol of the city's commitment to providing high-quality education for all students, and the college will be an important asset to the community.
