Elections Tomorrow

Sapora Up For Tenure Tonight

The Board of Higher Education will act tonight on the recommendation of the Faculty Committee on Appointments for the promotion of Joseph Sapora of the Hygiene Department to the rank of Instructor with tenure.

Despite rules of the Board making it impossible for an appointee to be appointed without tenure for more than one year, Sapora was appointed for his fifth year earlier this month. Now the faculty demands that he be refused this, will he be his best interest.

Mr. Sapora was appointed assistant professor in 1944.

Bertrand Russell Out—But Definitely

The Board of Higher Education will act tonight on the request of the Board of Directors to give the position back to the University of Oxford.

The Board's budget contains the very definite notation: "No funds herein appropriated shall be used for the employment of Bertrand Russell, or any other similar person." The Board's budget is a strict one.

Lex Taliones, Coat For Goat

Eight confused students are wandering around the school today as the result of a major foul-up in a big debate.

Said one: "I was supposed to be贯穿 around the room. Four students who couldn't tell the difference of being out with four coats, all belonging to other students who had to take the remaining four coats because I'm a new student.

When you figure that one out you'll understand where the confusion comes from.

The eight unfortunate students can't see that the claiming party, the Ticker, is only waiving a red flag for emergency duty. If the gentlemen concerned will leave their names and addresses, our kind editor and his associates will endeavor to correct what might be an embarrassing situation.—M.H.

De Lucca, Meadow New Business Bulletin Editors

At a recent staff meeting of the Student Council, it was announced that Frank De Lucca and Arthur Meadow would be selected editors.

Many other high school positions are open to freshmen as well as seniors. Applications will be accepted in room 922A.

Casting Today For HP Show

The House Plan variety show this year will be a joint faculty-student production, featuring songs from the Senior chorus. A place may be reserved and tickets at $25, 30, and 40 cents.

PM's Robert Rice Explains Paradox Of The Theatre

By Serena Weissman

The theatre of New York could be financially successful if it were located on the city dump," remarked Robert Rice, who directed "Spare Ribs" for the PM, at a meeting of the Theatre Club on Monday.

The Ticker is not sure whether metropolitan playgoers—aesthetically speaking. It makes sense that the price of real estate in New York is much higher, but it is hard to say that audiences can't afford the price of tickets, and we know that principal playgoers are few. Therefore, it is a paradox.

On the side of paradox, PM's Robert Rice explained that "Spare Ribs" flops, plays that close in a matter of days after the opening, are surely a paradox of the kind that it's an innate system; producers set up dummy corporations in theatres they own. There are expenses, for they have no rent, and little overhead. Investors come to invest.

If the play is a success, the profits are practically nil. If the play is not a success, the producers remain in the same place. Investors come in a matter of days after the opening, but they are out—but the producers remain in the same place. Investors come in a matter of days after the opening, but they are out—but the producers remain in the same place.

Theatrical's March production, "Margin for Error," the social-satire-mystery-comedy, now in rehearsals, opens on the 2nd and continues the rest of March. Tickets will be on sale shortly, at $25, 40, and 55 cents.

Halman Rejects Criticism From Sports Editor

By Jack Halman

With apologies to the company of "Annie Doesn't Live Here"

Mr. Hallman doesn't like me anymore.

He had come to the door and I said to him that I was writing to him like this.

"Think I am just a nobody and here the mighty Halman..."
