Birth Of The "Union"

By Judy Leventhal

This is the story of the birth of a "Union" and of the people who watched it grow. It begins in 1919 in the heart of Manhattan. City College is the scene of booming student activity. Pockets are constantly being emptied to support student government, athletics, and publications. The owners of these pockets complain that they are never free from financial soliciting.

As suggested by Arthur Taft, Secretary of Student Council, and the College Administration, leaders "Why not combine all monetary requests for student activities into a unit?" And why not the students know what is being asked for, and ask to whom should the purchase of a "Union" booklet belong to Union activity? According to the proceeding of the Union, booklet is purchased by the students, and information received in any form.

Reaching the mid-century mark and the 15th anniversary of its first appearances at this branch of the college. Kicking off the festivities was a ribbon-cutting ceremony, in which President John Pomfret, after draping the pin-making of the Business School, modestly reflected on the progress made during the past 15 years. "This has been a good year for the School of Business," said Pomfret. "Our student body has grown, and our faculty members have shown their dedication to the college."

New Shakes Ups in CCNY Five Poses Numerous Queries

To those who are unfamiliar with the antics of the college at City College, the St. Joe's game last Wednesday night might come as a surprise. But if you've been following the college basketball season, you know that the team has been playing some of its best basketball during the 1944-45 season. And for a good many fans, the game was one of the most exciting of the year. But for those who didn't attend the game, it was a slow, drawn-out affair, with the Beavers emerging victorious by a final score of 75-68.

For the Beavers, it was a good win, but for the St. Joe's fans, it was a disappointing loss. The St. Joe's team, led by their star player, Bill Levine, was expected to do well in the competition. But they were no match for the Beavers, who had been playing some of their best basketball during the season. The St. Joe's defense was unable to contain the Beavers' offensive attack, and the Beavers were able to score at will.
