Heald Report Submitted Urging Tuition Charges At Municipal Colleges

President Buell G. Gallagher, Governor of New York, has submitted a report on tuition charges at municipal colleges. The report, titled "Heald Report Submitted Urging Tuition Charges At Municipal Colleges," suggests that tuition charges be imposed at municipal colleges to ensure the financial stability of these institutions. The report argues that the current system, where tuition is not charged, is unsustainable and poses a threat to the quality of education provided.

The report recommends that tuition charges be set at a level that covers the costs of education, including faculty salaries, maintenance, and other operational expenses. It also proposes the establishment of a tuition fund to ensure that no student is excluded from higher education due to financial constraints.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner, in his response, praised the report and announced that the city would work towards implementing the recommendations. He stated that the city would explore the feasibility of establishing a tuition fund and would consider other measures to support higher education, without compromising the quality of education.

The report and the mayor's response highlight the ongoing debate between free education and tuition charges, and the implications for both students and institutions.

Lexicon Faces Many Enigmas

Lexicon '61, the senior yearbook, faces a bleak future as it was learned last week by THE TICKET. Lexicon has announced that difficulties have been encountered in two major areas: one is a lack of subscriptions, and the other is a shortage of funds. The lack of subscriptions is due to the high cost of production and the increasing demand for higher-quality yearbooks. The shortage of funds is due to the high cost of printing and the inability of the publisher to secure adequate financing.

Helen Tarkowski, editor of Lexicon '61, has announced that difficulties have been encountered in two major areas: one is a lack of subscriptions, and the other is a shortage of funds. The lack of subscriptions is due to the high cost of production and the increasing demand for higher-quality yearbooks. The shortage of funds is due to the high cost of printing and the inability of the publisher to secure adequate financing.

The editor of the yearbook also pointed out that this situation is not unique. The problem exists in other schools as well, and the same situation will affect the future of yearbooks. The same problem exists also for Lexicon, which is a high-quality yearbook that has always been a source of pride for the students and the school.

Beaver Basketball Team Prepares for 1960 'New Look'

By Lew Lipset

City College's basketball five will have a new look when it opens its season against Wagner December 1st. Missing will be Nat Holman, who retired in June from his long and illustrious career as Beaver mentor.

Also missing will be four of the Lavender's traditional rivals—New York University, St. John's, Manhattan and Fordham, who were dropped because of City's inability to compete with these 'big time' powers. Replacing the Met rivals are smaller schools: Buffalo State, Northeastern, Bucknell, Ursuline and American University.

Holman will be replaced by Dave Polansky, who by no means is unfamiliar with the Beavers. Polansky was the coach after Holman was forced to take a leave of absence last year with only seven of the starting positions, except those held by Marshall and Bender, apparently unsettled.

The Beaver schedule consists of 18 games, including nine Tri-State League games. The Beavers lost the first four, but rebounded to take four of the next five, with only a last second shot in the Hunter game standing between CCNY and a five game winning streak. Then everything went black as the last nine games were won.

The big job for Polansky will be replacing the head, Herb Ashman, who by no means is unfamiliar with the Beavers. He was the defensive ace of the team. He is also the coach feels that it is wisest to hold off on offense and will probably try to...
