Faber Wins SCAC Seat as Mandel Will Head Junior Class; Referendum Shows Inconsistencies in Vietnam Attitudes

Richard Faber '70 won his seat yesterday in the Student Council election along with thirty-three other candidates for Student and Class Council posts.

In the Class of '68 Mr. Faber received 108 "yes" and 30 "no" votes, in the Class of '69, 133-46; in the Class of '67, 94-47; and in the Class of '71, 84-44 for a total vote of 428 "yes" to 127 "no" votes.

Neil Leibowitz with 87 votes; Sandy Alani Eisen, 85; Arthur Alinsburg, 84 and Shelia Offman, 77 took the four representative seats in the Class of '67 over Arnold Teitelbaum, 87; Mark Herman, 86 and Herbert Marks, 85.

All six candidates in the Class of '69 won with Linda Horst getting 128 "yes" and 46 "no" votes; Harold Fremer, 121-50; Jon Wininger, 120-52; Frank Weiss, 116-54; Leon Weissberg, 108-69 and Douglas Lederman, 101-66.

The five candidates in the Class of '70 won their seats with David Trager receiving 92-23; Paul Ainsberg, 84; Herbert Herman, 87-27; Stewart Karpinsky, 86-26 and Alan Cohen, 85-25.

Jack Mandel, Junior Class President-elect, 84; Jay Simoff, 84 and Vic Sussman, 82 for the six seats in the Class of '71.

Jack Mandel defeated John Sussman by 87 votes.

The full text and the results of the referendum on Vietnam Secretary's seat 80-33.

Of the 877 students who voted on the referendum concerning the United States policy in Vietnam, 362 disapproved of the way President Lyndon Johnson is handling the situation.

Students also, in a four to one ratio, decided that the Johnson administration was not telling the public all they should know about the war. While 329 voted to continue bombing, 191 decided to bring the bombing to a halt. Student sentiment favored the idea of Council conducting polls by a vote of 505 to 82.

'Athletic Vacuum' Should Be Filled

By MARC BLOOM

In a sense this is my "29" column because with the "locking up" of this page at the printing shop last night I have behind one very as sports editor of The Ticker in order to take another position on next semester's edition.

I suppose this is the time when I should reflect upon the highlights of a year of City College sports events. I should discuss my relationships with the coaches and athletes and describe the locker room scenes after victory and defeat, joy and heartache.

But I can't do that. I have covered fencing but have never seen a tennis match. I have covered tennis but have never seen a tennis match. I have followed baseball, weightlifting, gymnastics, track and cross-country meets throughout the year.

Finally, the 30-odd hours of work which I devoted to this publication each week conflicted with most of the events that were conducted both at Lewisohn Stadium and on opposing campuses.

I wasn't really a part of the sports scene, just as the Baruch School is not really part of City College.

The kids who come through the crowded corridors of this municipal institution are downtown and City College is uptown. And the miles that separate the schools may as well be 100 miles.

Similarly, the athletic teams may as well be playing in Rock Springs, Wyo. Baruchians care little about the varsity picture with the exception of basketball. And that interest is dwindling in the wake of the seniors' poor showing.

"It's nice that swimming team won," remarked a benching of the day, "but who really cares?"

I had to agree with him. But it was my obligation to provide comprehensive coverage of varsity events in addition to the intramurals which schedule a two-hour sports program each week.

Editors of The Ticker have been condemning apathy for years. No enthusiasm, no interest— in anything: that's apathy or a form of it, and it exists at Baruch. But in July Baruch becomes Barnard for real and this change will be the opportunity for a varsity sports program.

This should be a major factor to be considered when the Board of Higher Education seeks to determine where the new Baruch is to be located.

It is imperative that the proper facilities are available to house every type of athletic team. If this is not considered, and we are placed in an educational rut, Baruch will be an unsaleable college of pseudo-intellectuals with no bonds linked to recreational enjoyment.

Activities like bingos, club meetings and cards drives should be joined by basketball tournaments, coaches' meetings and awards dinners.

The problem is to find the proper facilities and the proper places for the Baruch teams. But most of all it is to inject Baruch with some life and interest.

Baruch will exist in an "athletic vacuum" unless apathy is overcome.

Basketball

1 Up, 6 Down: Why?

By LARRY BROOKS

Losing is not fun. Six losses in the City College Invitational prior to Monday night's final was the fiasco of the week. The Ticker's basketball beat was the fastest.

The road to the Baruch-Brooklyn's tournament was quite difficult. Following the 2-1 record of the Ticker, the Mustangs of Brooklyn became the next opponent.

With the Mustangs, the Ticker was divided. Some were optimistic about the outcome of the game, while others were more realistic about the prospects.

The game was a hard-fought affair. The Baruchians were the first to strike, scoring on a layup from the baseline. The Brooklyners came back with a jumper from the foul line. The Ticker was still behind.

The second half saw the teams locked in a close contest. The Ticker had a slim lead going into the final minutes, but Brooklyn managed to tie the game at 21-21.

With time running out, the Ticker took a 24-21 lead with seconds left. The Brooklyners responded with a 3-point play from the baseline, and the game ended in a 24-23 victory for the Ticker.

The loss was a disappointing setback for the Ticker, but it served as a reality check and a reminder of the challenges ahead.

Wolfe: Team Not in Shape

Coach Red Wolfe rarely gets excited. He is a realist and accepts what he has in the way of basketball personnel. A victory is a victory, no matter how small.

The Ticker sports editor explained why his team is following the pattern of the varsity picture. Baruch, he said, has been. in the present academic year.

"They're playing a well-coached basketball team," Wolfe said. "We've got a lot of good players, but we haven't been able to put them all together on the floor at the same time. We're still learning.

"But we're getting better every game. We're working hard to improve our offensive and defensive skills. We're trying to develop a better understanding of the game.

"We'll continue to work hard and hope for the best. Basketball takes a lot of time and effort, and we're putting in the hours to make a difference."

In a sense this is my "29" column because with the "locking-up" of this page at the printing shop last night I have behind one week as sports editor of The Ticker in order to take another position on next semester's edition. I suppose this is the time when I should reflect upon the highlights of a year of City College's sport events. I should discuss my relationships with the coaches and athletes and describe the locker room scenes after victory and defeat, joy and heartbreak.

But I can't do that. I have covered fencing but have never seen a fencing meet. I have covered tennis but have never seen a tennis match. I have attended some wrestling, cross-country, rifle and soccer but have never seen these teams in action. I went to one baseball game; it was rainied out. I attended a swimming meet and last year saw one basketball game against Brooklyn College because my best friend was the Kingsmen.

Basketball and baseball are probably the two "bigger" sports at the College, but I have never spoken to Coach Podalsky and Mishkin. Track and cross-country are the only activities with which I have been closely associated.

The reason for this partial absorbtion from the College's sports scene is twofold. First, I have had several competent reporters who have covered the various teams. Second, I have had prior journalistic commitments which necessitated my presence at some 100 schoolboy track and cross-country meets throughout the year. Finally, the 360-old hours of work which I devoted to this publication each week conflicted with most of the events that we covered both at Lewisohn Stadium and on opposing campuses.

I wasn't really a part of the sports scene, just as the Baruch School is not really part of City College.

The kids who made through the crowded cochasses of this municipal institution are downtown and City College is uptown. And the events that separate the schools may as well be 100 miles.

I had to agree with him. But it was my obligation as sports editor of City College's newspaper to provide comprehensive coverage of varsity events in addition to the intramurals which schedule a two-hour sports program each week.

Editors of The Ticker have been condemning apathy for years. Enthusiasm on any college campus is related to sports, first and foremost. No sports, no enthusiasm, no interest — in anything: that is apathy or a form of it, and it exists at Baruch. But in July Baruch becomes Baruch for real and with this change will be the opportunity for a varsity sports program.

This should be a major factor to be considered when the Board of Higher Education seeks to determine where the new Baruch is to be located. It is imperative that the proper facilities are available to house any type of athletic team. If this is not considered, and we are placed in an educational rut, Baruch will be an unsuitable college for those interested in recreational enjoyment.

Activities like bingos, club meetings and card parties should be joined by basketball tournaments, coaches' meetings and awards dinners.

If the board-appointed members of the B.H.E. committee fail to recognize the importance of athletics as an internal part of the educational system, the Baruch School will remain as it is, where it is finally located. It will be polluted with the same kind of apathy that now seeps through its veins. It will exist in an athletic vacuum.
