Faber Wins SCAC Seat as Mandel Will Head Junior Class; Referendum Shows Inconsistencies in Vietnam Attitudes

Richard Faber '70 won his seat yesterday, in the Student Council election along with thirty-three other candidates for Student and Class Council posts.

In the Class of '68 Mr. Faber received 108 "yes" and 40 "no" votes, in the Class of '69, 133-46; in the Class of '70, 91-47; and in the Class of '71, 88-48. For a total vote of 428 "yes" to 127 "no" votes.

Neil Leibowitz with 87 votes; Sandy Alan Engen, 85; Arthur Almsberger, 84 and Shelly Offman, 77 took the four representative seats in the Class of '68 over Arnold Teitelbaum, 87; Mark Herman, 86 and Herbert Marks, 77.

All six candidates in the Class of '69 won with Linda Horst getting 128 "yes" and 46 "no" votes; Harold Fremer, 121-50; Jon Wininger, 120-58; Frank Weiss, 116-60; Leon Weissberg, 108-69 and Douglas Lederman, 101-66.

The five candidates in the Class of '70 won their seats with David Trager receiving 92-23; Paul Levitas, 90-27; Stewart Kardacy, 86-32; and Alan Cohen, 83-33.

Jack Mandel
Junior Class President
Jack Mandel defeated John Sorokin of the Class of '71. The full text and the results of the referendum on Vietnam bombing will be published on Page 3.

Richard Faber
S.C.A.C. Chairman
Sophomore Class 90-27.

Jerry Rothman, running unopposed took the President's spot 92-24, in the Class of '71. Winning the post of Vice President in the Class of '71, Robert Secretary's seat 80-33.

Of the 887 students who voted on the referendum opposing the United States policy in Vietnam, 562 disapproved of the way President Lyndon Johnson is handling the situation.

Students also, in a four-to-one ratio, decided that the Johnson administration was not telling the public all they should know about the war. While 322 voted to continue bombing, 151 decided to bring the bombing to a halt.

Student sentiment favored the idea of Council conducting polls by a vote of 505 to 82.

New Class Announced In Contemporary Problems

THE TICKER

The Baruch College has announced the following class, to begin in the fall semester of 1967:

The course is being offered for the first time...
Athletic Vacuum' Should Be Filled

By MARY BLOOM

In a sense this is my "29" column because with the "locking up" of this page at the printing shop last night I have behind me all colossus which necessitated my presence at some 100 schoolboy games throughout the year. Finally, the 30 or so hours of work which I devoted to this publication each week contrasted with most of the events that were conducted both at Lewisohn Stadium and on opposing campuses.

I wasn't really a part of the sports scene, just as the Baruch School is not really part of City College.

The kids who walk through the crowded corridors of this municipal institution are downtown and City College is uptown. And the 6 miles that separate the schools may as well be 60 miles.

Similarly, the athletic teams more as well be playing in Rock Springs, Wyo. Baruchians care little about the varsity picture with the exception of basketball. And that interest is dwindling in the wake of the team's poor showing.

"It's nice that swimming team won," remarked a Baruch student the other day, "but who really cares?"

I had to agree with him. But it was my obligation as sports editor of a City College newspaper to provide comprehensive coverage of varsity events in addition to the intramurals which schedule a two-hour sports program each week.

Editors of The Ticker have been condemning Baruch's apathy for years. Enthusiasm on any college campus is related to sports, first and foremost. No sports, no enthusiasm, no interest—anything that isn't part of any sports.
'Athletic Vacuum' Should Be Filled

By MARC BLOOM

In a sense this is my "29" column because with the "locking up" of this page at the printing shop last night I leave behind one role as sports editor of The Ticker in order to take another position on next semester's edition.

I suppose this is the time when I should reflect upon the highlights of a year of City College sport's events. I should discuss my relationships with the coaches and athletes and describe the locker room scenes after victory and defeat, joy and heartbreak.

But I can't do that. I have covered fencing but have never seen a fencing meet. I have covered tennis but have never seen a tennis match. I have attended two wrestling, water-polo, and soccer but have never seen those teams in action. I went to one baseball game; it was rain-soaked. I attended a swimming meet last year and one basketball game against Brooklyn College because my best friend plays for the Kingsmen.

Basketball and baseball are probably the two "biggest" sports at the College, but I have never spoken to Coach Polansky and Mishkin. Track and cross-country are the only activities with which I have been closely associated. The reason for this partial aloofness from the College sports scene is threefold.

First, I have had several competent reporters who have covered the various teams. Second, I have had prior journalistic commitments which necessitated my presence at some 100 schoolbox, track and cross-country meets throughout the year. Finally, the 30-nil hours of work which I devoted to this publication each week conflicted with most of the events that were conducted both at Lewisohn Stadium and on opposing campuses.

I wasn't really a part of the sports scene, just as the Baruch School is not really part of City College.

The kids who were through the crowded corridors of this municipal institution are downtown and City College is uptown. And the 6 miles that separate the schools may as well be 600.

Similarly, the athletic teams may as well be playing in Rock Springs, Wyo. Baruchians care little about the varsity picture with the exception of basketball. And that interest is dwindling in the wake of the team's poor showing.

"It's nice that swimming won," remarked a benching dawg the other day, "but who really cares?"

I had to agree with him. But it was my obligation as sports editor of a City College newspaper to provide comprehensive coverage of varsity events in addition to the intramurals which schedule a two-hour sports program each week.

Editors of The Ticker have been condemning apathy for years. Enthusiasm on any college campus is related to sports, first and foremost. No sports, no enthusiasm, no interest—in anything: that's apathy or a form of it, and it exists at Baruch. But in July Baruch becomes Baruch for real and with this change will be the opportunity for a varsity sports program.

This should be a major factor to be considered when the Board of Higher Education seeks to determine where the new Baruch will be located.

It is imperative that the proper facilities are available to house every type of athletic team if this is not considered and we are placed in an educational rut. Baruch will be an unsettled college of pseudo-intellectuals with no bonds linked to recreational enjoyment.

Activities like bingos, club meetings and card drives should be joined by basketball tournaments, coaches' meetings and awards dinners. If the narrow-minded members of the B.H.E. committee fail to recognize the importance of athletics as an integral part of the educational system, the Baruch School—no matter where it is finally located—will be polluted with the same kind of apathy that now seeps through its veins. It will exist in an athletic vacuum.

Wolfe: Team Not in Shape

Coach Red Wolfe rarely gets excited. He is a realist and accepts what he has in the way of basketball personnel. But he does yearly explain why his team is following the pattern of the last 10 years.

They're playing at the same level of performance as last year. The only difference is that they are present and available to people.

"They're playing at a 60 percent level. There's very little hope for one of these kids to get a scholarship. But they look OK because they are available to people. But they don't have the ability to do anything about it. They're just there. They're playing at a level that they're able to play at. And they're not going to go anywhere because of that."
