Students at LIU Demonstrate Against Sale of Brooklyn Site

A crowd estimated at 700 assembled at City Hall Thursday and Friday protesting the possible sale of Long Island University's Brooklyn Center to the City University.

The group consisted mainly of students with only a few faculty members taking part.

A week ago Friday, the Board of Regents approved the sale, which paved the way for relocation of the Baruch School — which will become the Baruch College as of July 1 — at the site.

The group took the same route that was taken last October when a similar demonstration was held protesting the proposals made by the Board of Higher Education.

Hard-driving rains which began early Thursday afternoon caused most of the demonstrators to leave the scene to seek shelter. Last fall, with temperatures in the low 40's, demonstrations had lasted through the night, ending Friday afternoon.

The route was a one-mile excursion beginning at the Brooklyn location at the Flatbush Avenue Extension and DeKalb Avenue, and continued over the Brooklyn Bridge to City Hall.

The demonstration began early Thursday morning and lasted through the night, ending Friday afternoon at about 2.

Students at LIU were first informed of the planned actions at last week when students leaders, using megaphones, shouted their intentions through the corridors of the school. A number of speeches were also made.

Last night the school's Junior Council met to "decide on a plan of action." There are a lot of internal politics involved," said Harvey Steinberg, news editor of Seawanaka, the school's day session newspaper. Mr. Steinberg noted that different forces within the school, cause of political aspirations, have sought opposing solutions to the problem.

The main reason for student protests is that the school's day session newspaper, Seawanaka, is still pending in court.

Vote is Students' 'Most Important Weapon'

By JOE ALTIER

During a presentation on December 13 a panel of educators revealed the political influence that students can have. Professor H. Herodeeff, History Department, proposed that students make a decision in their educational careers that will affect the political situation in the future. Professor W. E. C. D. Bezek, Economics, emphasized that the vote is the most important weapon in affecting the political system.

The students were questioned as to their political affiliation, voting experience, and activities toward the political system. They were divided into five groups: Republicans, Democrats, Independents, Liberal, and Conservative. The students with five correct answers on the political science test of "political cognition" in which the respondents felt that the activities of both the state and local governments had a great effect on them, were far less politically informed than those students with political party affiliation. Of these five groups, the independent group was the second largest with 45 per cent of the respondents.

Spy Thriller 'Different'

By NELL MURRAY

"Something different" was the mood that attracted the woman in front of me and I dropped her off at the Trans-Europe Express. It had been a new idea for film making, "something different" in an entertainment industry which is as conservative as the entertainment system in some areas of business.

The mood of the students who were interviewed for the study was more promising. The group was the second largest with 45 per cent of the respondents. The most telling evidence of active the students chose in order to change laws was that they considered political science to be the most popular method used by students studying in areas of business. The most popular method chosen by many were students in the sciences. Informal groups among students and neighbors to write letters or sign petitions. Of those who have not shown majors, 11 per cent used voting as a method.
Call for an Open Dialogue

With the births of the Baruch College only a year apart and the task of guaranteeing that they enter into the many circles of the College by publishing and personal activities. In this issue, we have attempted to create a whole range of activities to ensure that the students of Baruch College have an outlet to express their ideas, concerns, and grievances.

There is a need for open dialogue on the part of the administration. The administration should be more open and more receptive to the ideas and concerns of the students. The administration should not only listen to the students, but also take action on their concerns.

Forward March

The recent action by the Department of Student Personnel Services permitting students to hold meetings outside of the College in order to discuss issues of concern to them is a step in the right direction toward the realization of increased student participation in the College.

The realization of this goal, however, can only be accomplished by the students themselves. It is the responsibility of students to form groups or committees to deal with their own concerns and grievances.

What Happened to the Class of '69?

A number of students have been left in the staff of Lexicon, the School yearbook; and if no one steps forward to meet the task of guaranteeing that its entry into the anniversary of the Baruch College. It will also include the political militancy of the students who have left.

The students who have left are concerned with the student—should be a forum for an Open Dialogue. They are attempting to substitute liberty for communism. Absurd—on the Committee on Transition. It is our responsibility to ensure that the students have an outlet to express their ideas, concerns, and grievances.

Letters to the Editor

Whose Priority?

To the Editor of The TICKER,

I read with interest the article "The Students' Voice: Who Should Be the Priority?" that appeared in your recent issue. I would like to offer a different perspective on the issue.

I believe that the students' voice should be the priority. As a member of the student body, I have firsthand experience with the challenges and needs of our community. I have attended various meetings and have seen the issues that concern our students.

In my opinion, the students' voice should be the priority. It is important to listen to the students and ensure that their voices are heard. It is also important to support the students in their efforts to improve the educational environment at our institution. Only through open dialogue and active participation can we ensure a better future for all.

City Bowled Over

City College, which recently entered a new era of student activism, ended with today's announcement of a new research grant from the National Science Foundation. The grant will be used to fund a major study on the effects of drug use on the community.

The research project, which is being led by Dr. John Smith, will involve interviewing 500 people who use drugs and 500 who do not. The goal is to identify the factors that contribute to drug use and to develop interventions to prevent it.

The research will be conducted over the next two years. The results will be used to inform policy decisions and to help us better understand the impact of drug use on the community.

If your major is listed here, IBM would like to talk with you March 15th.

Sign up for an interview at your placement office—even if you're headed for graduate school or military service.

Maybe you think you need a technical background to work for IBM. Not true. Sure we need engineers and scientists. But we also need liberal arts and business majors. We'd like to talk with you even if you're in something as far afield as Music. Not that we'd hire you to Analyze Bach fugues. But we might hire you to analyze problems as a computer programmer.

What you can do at IBM

It's solving problems. So if you have a logical mind, we need you to help our customers solve problems in such diverse areas as government, business, law, education, medicine, science, the humanities.

Whatever your major, you can do a lot of good things at IBM. Change the world (maybe). Combine your education (generally) through plans such as our Tailored Refund Program, Marketing, and Finance or Administration. If you can't make a campus interview, send an outline of your interests and educational background to P.J. Konwie, IBM Corporation, 425 Park Avenue, New York, New York 10022. We're an equal opportunity employer.
Baruch Wins

Playing their best game in a while of this season, the Baruch basketball boys overcame the Yorkville team in a nailbiter which carried them to a victory in a near-disaster, winning 66-63.

For the first time in the Baruch season, they played tough defense, something they really needed. The defense, in fact, carried them through the game. The team scored only 15 points in six minutes, but they did not go over the 15 point mark for the entire game. The defense was the key to the victory.

The Baruch team consisted of the following starters: (C) C. B. Tenen, (F) R. K. Jaffe, (F) S. J. Miller, (C) C. B. Tenen, (G) A. L. Greenwald, and (G) A. L. Greenwald. The team was led by C. B. Tenen, who scored 20 points, followed by R. K. Jaffe, who scored 15 points. The team played a solid game, keeping the Yorkville team scoreless for most of the game.

Parriers Down Army

With big things expected of them this year, City's parriers had been mildly disappointing with only 4-4-1 in dual meet competition. But the team finally found their groove in a big win over the Army, 87-72, in their final meet of the season.

The team was led by the return of star player Joe Zolot, who scored 27 points, followed by Tommie Richardson, who scored 22 points. The team played a solid game, keeping Army scoreless for most of the game.

Enjoying Themselves

By LARRY BROOKS

One of the seemingly obvious things that many sports fans fail to realize is that their heroes are people, just like themselves. One of the reasons for this naivete may be that there are few fans who are lucky enough to meet their heroes. And some are lucky not to.

The members of the Chicago White Sox and New York Yankees both wasted no time in getting to know the fans. They were introduced to the fans before the game, and they greeted the fans with a warm handshake. The fans were delirious, and they were all smiles as they watched the game.

The fourth team which I have come in contact with—the City College basketball team—of which I was a part of a year ago, was much more relaxed and more friendly. These Dixies did nothing to enhance the public image of baseball; in fact, nearly everything they did helped hurt it.

The Baruch team entered the gym later and would have joined them but he couldn't make it up all the steps. Then, Joe Keizer came with Jackie.

There were Sam (The Great Impressionist) Sandberg, Joe (Buddah) Mulvey, Sidney (The People's Choice) Goldstein, Marty (Number One) Hutner. Coach Bob Polansky advised his team to stay loose, to "go out and enjoy yourselves, to have fun."

Upon hearing this, the entire team, which was composed of a great bunch of guys, was elated. The team played a solid game, keeping the Army scoreless for most of the game.

The Beavers, on the other hand, were defeated by City, 69-62. They were led by Joe Keizer, who scored 37 points, followed by Gil Fishman, who scored 22 points. The team played a solid game, keeping City scoreless for most of the game.
