Admissions Frozen; "CUNY Threatened"

In an unprecedented response to proposed budget cutbacks, The City University of New York, the Board of Higher Education has frozen all new admissions to CUNY for next fall. The freeze will mean that an estimated 34,400 graduates of CUNY who normally would receive letters of admission will not know whether they have been admitted to CUNY. The President of the Board of Higher Education has issued a warning that any new budget cuts by the Legislature in the next session "could further reduce state aid to the City University in 1970-71."

"The Board declared "the very existence of the City University is threatened by these proposals."

According to Chancellor H. Bowker, the 34,400 figure includes 3,000 high school graduates from disadvantaged areas whom the university had planned to admit to its SEEK and College Discovery programs.

In a memorandum to the Board, Dr. Bowker asserted that CUNY's Administrative Council had voted unanimously for the freeze.

Alluding to the possibility of selective review of the proposed budget cuts suggested by legislative leaders in Albany last week, the Chancellor declared: "Although the Governor's past actions have encouraged the growth of the university as a public higher educational resource, we must realistically recognize that our budgetary constraints for the coming year may very well be those set forth in our original proposal." Dr. Bowker said the cuts would compel a 20 per cent reduction in regular admissions, so no new admissions to SEEK and College Discovery and, hence in programs.

Curriculum Committee Meets; Freedom of Choice Stressed

The Ad Hoc Committee, which has been formulating a curriculum for the liberal arts major, presented its recommendations. According to Dean Andrew Lavender, chairman of this committee, the group has been working with an eye toward a greater variety of possible choices. "On the whole," he says, "we believe there should be a greater number of courses available to students."

Lavender pointed out that the committee has concentrated on the recommendations of the student representatives, and that the committee has also taken into account the recommendations of the faculty. "The committee has tried to be as fair as possible in its recommendations," he said.

In order to make the Baruch College experience a more vibrant and satisfying one for Black students, the Society of Koromantee, founded by the Afro-American Society, presented President Weaver with a list of five recommendations for last Wednesday. The recommendations were developed and discussed via normal channels. (They are reproduced in full below.)

President Weaver indicated that he agrees with most objectives and called the recommendations "fairly reasonable," but that implementation "involved the budget situation, and the budget, in a word, is prohibitive."

The president of the Society of Koromantee, Albert B. Pimentel, was asked what his group would do if the recommendations were not implemented. "We will have to investigate other methods to fulfill our objectives," he replied. "We hope that our proposals are feasible, and that they will be more congruent and appealing in the individual student."

Since the Baruch College is presently implementing a new school of Liberal Arts, the integration of these recommendations into the course offerings will pose absolutely no problem in being included in the planning of the new school.

President Weaver Impresses at And Is Impressed by Hillel

President Weaver was found to be impressed by the atmosphere at Hillel House in a recent interview with President Weaver. The President noted that the visit was a positive experience for him and expressed his admiration for the organization.

President Weaver was lauded for his commitment to diversity and inclusion, and for his leadership role in promoting these values within the university. The President also praised Hillel House for its contributions to campus life and for fostering a sense of community among students.

President Weaver expressed his hope that the visit would lead to a closer partnership between the university and Hillel House, and that future leaders of the university would continue to support and engage with the organization.

Hillel meets Prof. Frazier

Professor Thomas E. Frazier, one of the foremost philosophizers of the Baruch College campus, was given a standing ovation at Hillel House. Though a member of the Jewish faith, Professor Frazier is known for his eclectic approach to philosophy, which includes a wide range of topics.

Malcolm X Eulogized

At Memorial Ceremony

On Friday, The Society of Koromantee sponsored a memorial ceremony for the late Malcolm X. The event was held at the Student Center, where Malcolm X was honored as a black hero and a leader in the struggle for civil rights.

Malcolm's famous speeches were particularly impactful, and his message of self-reliance and black empowerment resonated with many in attendance. The ceremony included performances by various members of the Baruch College community, as well as reflections on Malcolm X's legacy.

Puerto Rican Studies Program
Called for as P.R.I.D.E. Meets

Last week P.R.I.D.E., Puerto Rican Institute for Defense and Education, held its first meeting in the University Center. P.R.I.D.E. is formed as an answer to the "counter-insurgency" action. It is an independent and ideologically typed organization that will seek to influence and mobilize the Puerto Rican community of the mainland.

The formation of P.R.I.D.E. is the result of numerous meetings of Puerto Rican students, many of whom had participated in the Uganda liberation movement and in the Egyptian revolution.

The program of P.R.I.D.E. includes the following: 1) to mobilize Puerto Rican students on the mainland; 2) to provide a forum for the development of Puerto Rican students; 3) to create a Puerto Rican network; 4) to sponsor cultural events; 5) to provide a forum for the discussion of Puerto Rican social, economic, and political problems.

P.R.I.D.E. will work to establish a network of Puerto Rican students on the mainland, and to organize a Puerto Rican network in the mainland. It will sponsor cultural events, such as film screenings, lectures, and discussions, and will provide a forum for the discussion of Puerto Rican social, economic, and political problems. It will also work to create a Puerto Rican network in the mainland, and to provide a forum for the discussion of Puerto Rican social, economic, and political problems.

The program of P.R.I.D.E. is based on the following principles: 1) to establish a Puerto Rican network in the mainland; 2) to provide a forum for the development of Puerto Rican students; 3) to mobilize Puerto Rican students on the mainland; 4) to sponsor cultural events; 5) to provide a forum for the discussion of Puerto Rican social, economic, and political problems.

Money!!

The University of New York, with a roll of 10,000 students, is one of the largest in the country. In recent years, the University has been plagued by financial difficulties, and the Board of Trustees has been forced to cut back on its budget. This has led to a decrease in funding for programs and facilities, and a decrease in the quality of education available to students.

The University's financial problems have been exacerbated by the fact that many of its programs are expensive to run. The University's budget is divided into several categories, including salaries, equipment, and travel. Each of these categories has been cut back in recent years, and the University has been forced to make difficult decisions about which programs to cut.

The University's financial problems are not unique to New York. Many universities across the country are facing similar problems, and the situation is likely to get worse before it gets better. The University's problems are a result of the fact that many universities rely too heavily on tuition fees to fund their operating budgets. This is not sustainable in the long term, and universities will need to find new sources of funding if they are to remain viable.

Letter to The Editor

Dear Editors:

I attended a screening of "TOM SWIFT" the other night. It was a very promising film, but there were some scenes that I found a bit troubling. The film seemed to veer off into more explicit territory than I had anticipated. I was surprised by the intimate moments and the nudity on display. I understand the need for authenticity and realism in film, but I think there was a fine line that was crossed.

I would like to suggest that future films consider the audience and the context in which they are being shown. While some scenes may be necessary to convey the film's message, others may not be appropriate for all audiences.

I hope that the filmmakers take my comments into consideration for future productions.

Sincerely,

Term Papers Made Easy

After years of lecturing in the field of American History, Professor John Doe from the University of California, Berkeley, has developed a new method to help students with their term papers. His method involves a step-by-step guide to help students organize their thoughts, conduct research, and write effectively. The guide is designed to help students avoid common pitfalls and improve their writing skills.

Technology has greatly improved our lives

For centuries, people have been using technology to improve their lives. From the invention of the printing press to the development of the internet, technology has played a significant role in shaping the world we live in today. In recent years, the advancements in technology have accelerated, leading to a world where we can access information instantly and communicate with people across the globe.

However, with the rapid advancement of technology comes the challenge of adapting to new tools and platforms. This can be particularly challenging for students who are researching for term papers.

"New York Times"
"I was in graduate school, I wanted to make sure I'd get to see what I was learning. That's why I went into marketing at IBM," says John Houlihan.

John received his MBA in 1966. He now sells IBM computers to mutual funds, banks and other financial institutions.

"It's a management consulting job," he says. "The reason is, computers affect nearly every area of a business. I get involved with all of its financial aspects, from its accounting, finance, and marketing, which means I have to know something about every corner of a business. So I'm constantly using the broad scope of knowledge and skills that I picked up in graduate school."

Working at the top
Another management consulting position at IBM's job is the level for people who have had "most of the time," he says. "I work with vice-presidents and the data processing manager. But I take care of dealing with the president because he's often the only one who can give you the buy-in." He adds, "And when you're working with people on that level, you need the management tools that you get in graduate school." He says that he often has to know about a regression analysis, but he can stop there. His main job is to get the right people involved in a project and to determine the optimum stock mix for a portfolio. Because, he says, getting an MBA was worth the extra effort."

Visit your placement office
I'm not sure if you've ever heard of the placement office on the campus at IBM. It's a place where you can go and see what's coming up next at IBM. It's also a place where you can talk to other people who have been there before you and get their advice on what to expect. And who knows, you might even find a job there! It's definitely worth the extra effort to stop by and see what's going on.

Career areas for MBA's
Marketing is one of the careers available to MBA's at IBM. Other careers include finance and financial planning, computer science, business systems, in engineering, and MBA's work mainly in industry engineering and manufacturing. Whatever area you choose, we think you'll get to use what you learned in college.

Sweetie Pie

By LARRY BROOKS

It was V-E Day, V-J Day and New Year's Eve at the Garden Sunday night. The Rangers handled the bullies of the National Hockey League a humiliating 9-0 whipping. The bullies specialize in dirty hockey, cheap shots and obscene gestures. Sunday they specialized in being humiliated. The bullies are the Boston Bruins.

The 17,350 resident maniacs (otherwise known as Ranger fans) went berserk as each tally one by one went through their minds during a thirty-eight second stretch in the third stanza. When the Blueshirts in rapid fire succession added tallies seven right after that, the final score was registered by Garden favorite Brad Park—his first N.H.L. goal—only added fuel to the fans' already-well lit fire.

Everything went right for the Rangers. Emilie is back and he adds at least one goal to the club. Ed Gilmore was in his usual form. His usual form is the best in the world. Bob Johnson, whose slap shot has been on vacation for much of the season, returned to backhand. Walt Tkaczuk who, along with Park, is racing toward the Rookie-of-the-Year award, tallied twice. Park excelled (again). Dennis Hextall netted his first big-league goal in a bad case of sunburn. Everyone played well. Even Eddie Lowalston stood as goalie led the crowd to cheers and whoops throughout the rout. With the scoreboard reading 9-0, he treated the Garden to a stirring rendition of "Happy Days Are Here Again." (Bush, maybe a little. But certainly not as buss as was yesterday.). In the final period, the scoreboard posed such beauties as "Hold the fort Eddie" and "Light 'Em Up, Eddie." For one thing, he will not allow the Rangers to hit the playoffs.

But best of all, the Rangers hit. And they hit. And they hit. And just as best, the Bruins were hit. (It was a case of "Hold the fort Eddie" and "Light 'Em Up, Eddie.")

On their last visit to New York, the Bruins totally humbled the then-Geoffrion-led Rangers, 4-2. The final score was more than meaningless; it is misleading. The Rangers were filling their own building. They were in a wild frenzy. Happy days were here again. Perhaps the fellow with the bullhorn voice in the mezzanine delivered the line of the night. As the Bruins skated off the ice he delivered the line, "Hey Eddie (Leyton)," he boomed, "play Talk to the Animals."

The Rangers let their bodies do the talking, and walking, and they walked all over the team that used to lead the league.

Varsity Teams Being Formed

Prof. Wolfe Named Faculty Mgr.

Last week it was announced that Prof. George Wolfe has been appointed faculty manager of athletics. When questioned on the possibility of varsity teams, Prof. Wolfe stated that all teams that are being formed are varsity teams.

The Big A

By MIKE FUHR

The "Big A" in this case is not Aqueduct, but big Lew Alcindor, all 7'2" of him. If not the best college basketball player ever to graduate, he is going to be the richest one. The "Big A" will probably get at least one million dollars to sign a pro contract.

The "Big A" has stated publicly and often that he would prefer to play in New York. This has caused many problems. The N.B.A. has given up fixing drafts and our beloved Knicks will not get the first draft choice. In the A.B.A. the New York Nets (their name this year) by chance won the coin toss from Houston, and will have first choice. In the N.B.A. the team that will get him (Phoenix or Milwaukee) is not the richest club and how much it could afford to pay him is in doubt.

In the A.B.A. it has been agreed that all of the teams will chip in to pay his bonus in order to save the league. Most ballplayers give the choice of playing in the city of their own choice and at a high price would grab at the opportunity. The "Big A" is not an ordinary ballplayer. I don't think he could give up the chance to play against great centers such as Chamberlain, Russell, Thurmond and Reed. But best of all, the Bangers hit. And they hit. And they hit. And just as best, the Bruins were hit. (It was a case of "Hold the fort Eddie" and "Light 'Em Up, Eddie.")

Bowling Tournament

The Barnish College Intramural Bowling Tournament will begin this week at National Bowling Recreation Center on Eight Ave and East 81, or on Friday, May 28, 1965 at 8:30 P.M. Anyone wishing to participate may sign up at the 17th floor office. The tournament will be held on Monday and Wednesday nights. The cost is $1 per game. This will be a good tournament. Your average is not important.
