Chancellor Protests Cuts in CUNY Budget

Mayor Lindsay’s “Cuts” Order: 8,000 Staff layoffs, 45,000 students; CUNY Chancellor Albert J. Broderick said Tuesday that the City University of New York’s financial plight was “critical.”

Broderick said he wanted to give the City University administration enough time to take action that would prevent the “catastrophic consequences” of Mayor Lindsay’s budget cuts at CUNY. While the Mayor’s order was expected to be implemented within the next few weeks, Broderick said he wanted to be able to intervene before the end of the year. He said that he would write to the Mayor to request a delay in the cuts.

In a statement, the Mayor’s office said it was working with CUNY officials to find ways to reduce the impact of the budget cuts. The Mayor’s office said it was committed to supporting CUNY and to finding ways to ensure that the University’s services continue to be provided to students.

Lionel Delange, the head of CUNY’s Board of Trustees, said the budget cuts were “a serious blow” to the University and called for a “concerted effort” to find ways to mitigate the impact of the cuts.

The Chancellor noted that he would need to take “unprecedented steps” to ensure that the University could continue to provide quality education to its students.

The Chancellor added: “The current situation is unprecedented. We understand that there are severe financial constraints. However, we must maintain the quality of education that we provide.”

Dr. Broderick said it would be difficult to maintain the quality of education at the University, but he was confident that they could find ways to mitigate the impact of the budget cuts.

The Chancellor’s statement came as the University faced a $17 million shortfall in its budget. The University has already laid off 2,000 faculty members and 6,000 staff members to help offset the budget cuts.

The Chancellor’s statement was made after the University’s Board of Trustees met to discuss the budget cuts and the University’s financial situation.

The Chancellor also noted that the University had already implemented a number of cost-saving measures, including reducing the number of courses offered and reducing the number of faculty members.

Dr. Broderick said: “We have already taken a number of steps to reduce our costs. We have eliminated courses, reduced faculty salaries, and reduced administrative salaries. However, these measures will not be enough to offset the budget cuts.”

DRAFT REFORM: More Commitments Received Every Day

Recognizing that public support is crucial for the success of educational reforms, the administration has been working diligently to address the concerns of faculty, students, and alumni. The most recent commitments have come from the following groups:

- Faculty: The faculty have agreed to support the reforms and to participate in the implementation process.
- Students: The student body has expressed enthusiasm for the reforms and has promised to actively participate in the implementation process.
- Alumni: The alumni have pledged to support the reforms and to provide financial assistance.

These commitments are a testament to the commitment of our community to the success of the reforms. We are confident that with the continued support of all these groups, the reforms will be successful.

N.S.A. Sues -- Calls Laws Unconstitutional Demands Right to Protest Without Fear

WASHINGTON (AP) -- A suit has been filed in federal court here challenging the constitutionality of legislation that was enacted to give schools a voice in decisions involving students.

The suit was filed by the National School Association (N.S.A.), a group that represents parents, students, and teachers.

The suit, which was filed in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, alleges that the legislation violates the First Amendment's guarantees of free speech and press.

The legislation, known as the "Student Bill of Rights," was passed by the state Legislature in response to a recent court ruling that found that students had a right to free speech on campus.

The suit contends that the legislation is unconstitutional because it gives the schools too much power in making decisions that affect students.

The N.S.A. argues that the legislation is a violation of the constitutional right to free speech and that it is an attempt to silence student dissent.

The suit asks the court to declare the legislation unconstitutional and to enjoin the state from enforcing it.

The case will be heard in the court in the coming months.
The City University is in a disquieting predicament. At the time of this writing, the plan is to cut new school expenditures in September from a negligible number. It is evident that the University's desire to higher education has been shut and indeed. How do we react to this?

I am afraid that loud protests against budget and price increases will not do the trick. The University's attitude will help to open the eyes of a far-fetched explanation. What we are faced with is a tariff crisis, and it will be pre­ posed of a fiscal nature that may help turn the key that opens the lock.

Macroeconomic and microeconomic theory and practice prescribes what a government must do in order to control the business cycle and what the individual firm can do when it is facing bankruptcy or marginal productivity. The short run shut down point. Not all of the theoretical predictions will be applied to the CUNY University's theory and practice.

From the macroeconomic perspective a government has the theoretical power to use its fiscal policy or its combination of both in order to control an economy which is either overheating or slowing down, and in the negatively, steeply sloped part of the business cycle.

Final policy allows a demand surcharge, or manipulating incomes, is overall the income distribution in the economy. The government's tax structure is no longer an issue. This is the short run shut down point. Not all of the theoretical predictions will be applied to the CUNY University's theory and practice.

This implies that the City University could charge its income earning assets.

If the end goal of the administrators of the University is to ensure its potential students that there will be a place for them in the school's autumn in September, then given their budgetary restrictions, it becomes necessary for it to continue subsidies, although worthy other goals.

Limbo Through Euphoria

As Amos noted, the stars would break through the cloud and show us the way. But the cloud would never go away. We would be in this state of darkness and confusion.

As we moved on, we noticed a group of people who appeared to be lost. They were standing in the dark, looking around. One of them spotted us and called out, "Hey, you guys! Are you lost too?"

We explained that we were in limbo and that the stars had not shown us the way. The group looked at us strangely and said, "Well, we're just as lost as you are!"

We talked about our experiences and how we had come to this state of being. We shared stories of our lives and how we had arrived at this point. We talked about our dreams and our hopes.

Finally, after what seemed like an eternity, the stars began to shine. We saw the way forward and began to move towards it.

As we continued on our journey, we encountered other groups of people who were also in limbo. We shared our stories and our experiences and helped them find their way.

In the end, we realized that we were not alone in our journey. We had found each other and were able to help each other find our way in the darkness.

And so, we continued on, our journey now guided by the stars and the knowledge we had gained from each other.

Transition To A Larger "Campus" in Process

By Tom Smith

Baruch College is in the process of becoming a true "campus," which is to say an institution that offers a more extensive range of academic programs than it presently does. This is due primarily to the fact that Baruch is currently located in the heart of Manhattan, where space is limited. As a result, the college has had to expand its facilities in order to accommodate the growing number of students.

The expansion plans include the construction of a new campus building on Lexington Avenue, which will house the College of Business Administration. This building will be located at the intersection of Lexington Avenue and 25th Street, and will be completed by the fall of 1969.

In addition, Baruch plans to construct a new dormitory building on East 23rd Street, which will provide accommodations for an additional 500 students. The dormitory will be completed by the fall of 1970.

As a result of these expansions, Baruch College will be able to offer a wider range of academic programs than it presently does. This will enable students to choose from a more diverse selection of courses, and will also enable the college to attract a broader range of students.

The new campus will also be more convenient for students, as it will be located in a more accessible location. Students will be able to access the college's facilities more easily, and will also be able to take advantage of the many amenities that are located in the area.

Overall, the expansion of Baruch College's facilities will enable the college to better serve its students, and will also enable it to attract a more diverse range of students.

be eligible for our senior colleges. But we could not send out notices of admission to the community colleges because, under the admissions criteria, effective for senior colleges, only those who would normally be admitted to senior colleges would have been a serious problem for the University. The University's senior college and graduate programs are based on actual expenditures by the city.

"Under the law passed by the legislature before its reces that the $13 million, a dollar or so less than that, would either have no effect on the city's ability to fund salary boosts, Dr. Bowker said. This implies that the budgetary proposals made by the City Budget Office that we can anticipate administrative action once the budget is passed.

"Dr. Bowker noted that the Governor had revised his original budget by a dollar or so less than that, and would have made a $25 million in additional state aid for New York City's higher education system.

In addition to the $17 million funding gap in the budgetary proposals, the University must also pay further reductions through salary boosts, Dr. Bowker said. We have been told by the City Budget Office that we can anticipate administrative action once the budget is passed.

"Dr. Bowker asserted that the 'mandated' reductions in state subsidies are acting as a lopsided distortion of priorities toward higher education. They have been a serious problem for New York City's higher education system.

"The Chancellor said that "Once we are ready to begin our journey for the golden fleece, as the idea of increasing the budget by reducing subsidies in the persons of Nick Grammas and Bill Zachary, the Baruchians made it a one-sided affair.

"We were now ready to begin our journey for the golden fleece. All our last years were behind us. All the hard work before coming to the program was behind us. We knew somehow that I found myself and that I am now able to live with a confident human being and help others who are less fortunate than myself and who want to improve their lives."

The principal challenges facing Baruch College's new administration are well understood and are covered by the Baruch College Regents. As a new concept at Baruch, this Bowling Night victory ignited a good deal of spirit within the Apollon Chapter.
