Sweeping Changes are Presented In Baruch’s New Business Curriculum

A new Business Curriculum calling for a great deal more freedom and flexibility will be presented to the faculty on Wednesday. The proposal from the Undergraduate Curriculum Committee was approved at the group’s meeting on Wednesday afternoon and on the curriculum committee. The council’s proposal is overthrown by favoring (4-3) a new program of the new program or the present curriculum. Students who have completed the new program will be given the chance to become effective in September. All new students should follow the plan presented to council by Jessy Lipman and Chris Andrews the two student members.

Total 128

History

- The student will have a greater variety of History Courses from which to choose. European History 1 and 2 will continue to be offered. American History 4 and 5 will also be offered. Other courses which will be newly offered will be Social Science and Civilizations in Asia and Africa and Development of Civilization in Latin America.

Management and Marketing

- While Management 103 and Marketing 110 will continue to be given, the student will have other Marketing and Management courses to choose from as part of his business requirement. In lieu of Management 103 and Marketing 110.

Specialization

- While 24 credits will still be required for specialization only 12 will be required to meet the requirements of the student’s major.

- The other 12 will be electives in that specialization. This modification covers all majors except accounting and education. Accounting students being of state law will still be required to take the same business courses as they do now. The changes in humanities requirements however will affect them. An interim education program will be presented in next Tuesday’s issue of Ticker.

By JOEL SEIDNER

We have lost a friend, David Bateman, Freshman, and others who have not yet taken Accounting 101 will never know of his loss because David Bateman is out of the curriculum. Let me explain.

Practically set number one, formerly given in accounting 101 was the book of a proprietary firm, owned in whole by one David Bateman, an individual involved in a trading company. Bateman was renowned among IRS circles for his consistently erroneous books. But Bateman had a cop out. Whenever he was called down to explain, he would say something like, "I stayed up all night and I couldn't finish it," or "I didn't know it was due today," or "The guy I copied from had it right, so how can I be wrong?"

Yes, we lost a friend when we lost David Bateman.

(To the Tune of "Ruby Tuesday")

Goodbye David Bateman,
Who could pin a net income on you;
When you change with every worksheet,
You bet we won't miss you.

We knew that one before us did it better,
And that's what we'll do right if we copy it to the letter.
So we'll ask you for help,
We're a copy be found:
And one long night,
We'd write and write.

Goodbye David Bateman,
Who will hang net income on you?
When you change with every worksheet,
When will they get rid of set number two.

In response to student demands, David Bateman will be replaced by Goodman and Gatebury. Read on.

On May 30, Memorial Day, Goodman and Gatebury became insurance with an investment of ten shovels, one hundred board feet of knotty pine and working capital of Goodman died, and his will stated that his burial be handled by Goodman and Gatebury. Make the entry for the good will.

One June 4 G&G bought three slightly warm Cadillac limousines from Harry the Fencer. Make an entry debiting miscellaneous expenses, vouchers missing, and credit Petty Cash. The cars cost Harry five years and G&G $2,000 a piece. On June 5 a mortician working for the firm found $300 in cash in the pocket of a dead man. He pocketed that for himself. There is no entry. Is the $300 part of his reportable income for the year?

G&G started a fire in an unused building they owned in back of their funeral home. The building cost them $500 as it was bought from a New York City Bank. Make a loss of $12,000 on fire insurance. Make an entry for gain on fire loss and remove the building from the books. Credit smart thinking as various incriminating documents burn up also.

On June 7 G&G, in need of funds immediately, for one of their outside ventures, borrowed $500 from Saturn, the hip helmet. Set up the payment schedule, assuming monthly payments of $20 a week for 52 weeks.

On June 8, a Better Business Beau man casually began asking questions. Make an entry for a contribution of $200 to the BBB and debit community service expenses.

On June 9, a book previously contracted, was reclaimed by the deceased's former wife, who now has taken the matter to court with the other three wives. Debt Debit Debts and Credit Allowance for Goods.

On June 14, the probate court put an injunction on the funeral arrangements in Bateman's will and declared that his body could not be buried until the matter was straightened out. Make the appropriate debit to goods and the appropriate debit to Inventory. Assume that the will is a bad omen.

On June 16, the bookkeeping firm of Simason and more advised Goodman and Gatebury that it would be better to dispose of Bateman's body as it was smelling the breeze. Make the appropriate allowance for decomposition, removal of asset, inventory, from the books.

On June 19, The Burnham Manufacturing Company loaned Goodman and Gatebury to the disaster scene to get the ambulance and to copy the books, for $200. Make the necessary entries for disbursement for $200, also. G&G obtained permission from the Curriculum...

We believe that under this proposed curricular business students will be able to make their programs more relevant to themselves and their career objectives. The flexibility will also provide stimulus to the faculty to see that courses are more meaningful and relevant in light of changing society.

E especially farsighted in the curricular committee proposals is the decision to give students credit in this option by taking advantage of the new liberalized program. Almost every student should be able to increase the number of free electives he can take by transferring to the new plan.

We call on the student body to talk about the plan with their teachers and urge its students. We urge students and faculty to write any thoughts they have on the curricular changes and bring them into the Ticker office for publication in next Tuesday's issue.

We urge the faculty to take time out to discuss curriculum proposals with their students and learn first hand from them what they think.

When the chips are down next Wednesday we urge the faculty to support the findings of their committee and ratify both the new business curriculum and the recommended procedures for adoption.

In addition to the new curriculum many departments are proposing new elective courses to further extend student choice. Many of these courses seem especially relevant in our urban society. We applaud those departments which are actively working to provide relevant and interesting courses to Baruch students.
