Council Committee Will Search For Dean

And before it was all over, Harry Pace had declared himself a candidate for the position of Dean of Students. How did this all come about? Read on, my children, read on...

As soon as the Council members had assembled, President Pace addressed them, and said that he wanted all business put aside, because he had a matter of great importance to tell them. Despite his appeal, Council was not swayed, and they insisted on

Jesse Lipman, Council Treasurer, who was in President Weaver's office when the demands were presented, but who was not a member of the committee, provided the basic explanation of what President Weaver had really said. According to Jesse, Weaver had not said that he had no faith in the present job, but that he would be putting his present job in jeopardy, that he would not get selected for this position, he would be rapidly unemployable

Furthermore, President Weaver had explained the need to choose a new dean in secrecy, because most recruiting is done among people who have positions in other colleges, and a person who was being considered publicly announced his desire for the position, he would be putting his present job in jeopardy, and chances are that if he didn't get selected for this position, he would become rapidly unemployable.

As for the demand that the student body have the right to exercise the ultimate veto power over any decision made by the administration concerning the Dean of Students, the right is assigned to the Student body after the Council has made its decision. The selection of the new Dean of Students is made by the Ad Hoc Committee, read on Canons to the right of the committee members had also been discussing the characteristics of a Dean of Students. The committee members had been looking for a new dean in secrecy, because most recruiting is done among people who have positions in other colleges, and a person who was being considered publicly announced his desire for the position, he would be putting his present job in jeopardy, and chances are that if he didn't get selected for this position, he would become rapidly unemployable.

Panelists were waiting to present President Weaver with a list of three demands. The demands concerned the selection of the new Dean of Students, and the committee presented them to Dr. Weaver. Dr. Austin had attended the town meeting earlier where most of the committee members had been discussing the characteristics of a Dean of Students. Student Veto On Dean Of Students? President Weaver Thinks Otherwise

At 3 o'clock last Thursday, most students were either on their way home by attending a late class, a group of Baruch students calling themselves the Ad Hoc Committee for the selection of the Dean of Students had assembled, President Weaver had really said. According to Jesse, Weaver had not said that he had no faith in the present job, but that he would be putting his present job in jeopardy, and chances are that if he didn't get selected for this position, he would be rapidly unemployable.

To President Weaver:

We, the Ad Hoc Committee for the selection of the Dean of Students demand that you accept the committee's recommendations for the position. If further installations this

President Weaver answered the demands with an explanation of his responsibilities according to the laws of the Board of Higher Education. The bylaws make it

During the bitter debate on the issue of Viet Nam, President Chandler's role was that of a peacemaker. As the President of CUNY, he was expected to remain neutral in the conflict, but his neutrality was questioned by some students who felt that he was siding with the administration. The President, however, maintained that he was trying to be fair and balanced in his approach.

On October 14, 1969, the President announced that he would resign from his position. The announcement came after weeks of tension between the President and the students. The President had been accused of not doing enough to address their concerns, and he had been criticized for his handling of the situation.

The announcement was met with a mixed reaction. Some students welcomed the news, while others expressed their disappointment. The President's resignation was seen as a victory for the students, who had been protesting for months. However, the situation was far from over, and the University continued to be mired in controversy.
COMMUNITY COLLEGE FORMED; NAMED AFTER REVOLUTIONARY

The Board of Higher Education last night voted to name the new college Community College VIII. Students are to begin attending classes there next month, and the college is expected to have a full time faculty of 20 by the end of the academic year.

The college will be located on the site of the old Fort Tryon School, which burned to the ground last summer. The college was originally planned to be named Fordham College, but the name was changed in order to make it more accessible to students.

The college will offer a wide range of courses, including business, science, and humanities. Students will be able to transfer their credits to other colleges and universities.

The college will have a strong focus on community service, and students will be encouraged to participate in various community service projects.

The college will be open to all students, regardless of their background or socioeconomic status.

When Puerto Rico fell from Spanish rule following the Spanish-American War, Hostos returned to his homeland in a vain effort to urge his countrymen to work for national independence. Disappointed at the prevailing confusion, which left Puerto Rico a possession of the United States, Hostos left for the Dominican Republic where he was appointed Director of the Central College and Inspector General of Public Education. He died in that country in 1908.

Board of Higher Education Chairman Porter E. Chandler declared: "No figure in the history of the Western Hemisphere better represents the relevance of education to needed social and political change than Hostos. The college we name in his honor should provide inspiration, not only for students of Hispanic-American heritage, but to all who are familiar with his remarkable career."

Mayor John V. Lindsay asserted: "In giving his name to this new college, we recognize the contributions all Puerto Rican citizens have made to New York City. We believe the students who attend the institution named in his honor will follow the example of Hostos in using their education to the benefit of the Spanish-speaking people of our hemisphere."

Fellowships Offered

CAPE CORAL, Fla. — Noted news analyst Eric Severeid has joined a distinguished panel of communications specialists who will serve on the scholarship committee for Gulf American Corp.'s Edward R. Murrow Fellowship Program, which will provide annual awards totaling $8,000 to graduate students.
