The New Stat Course An Unfair Burden

Suddenly, as if sensing the threat to their life blood, students have sensed new requirements weighing down upon them. Nearly a year after a new curriculum for business was passed, someone seems to have realized that it might well be different from what had always existed. The present controversy centers around two courses which became required, Business Policy 100, and Statistics 357.

Business Policy 100 is an interdisciplinary course in business which centers around decision making. All the work in the course involves solving problems, coming to decisions after considering a given situation. The other course in question, Statistics 357, is titled Introduction to Computer Concepts. The catalog description reads as follows: a survey of basic principles of the operation of electronic and digital computers and computer systems with special emphasis upon aspects related to business.

The main question on the minds of the students today is whether the course is required in addition to or in lieu of Stat 15, the old requirement. Neither the curriculum handbook nor the Undergraduate Bulletin lists Stat 357 as a requirement, only 15. R. Fehnklein, who was a student representative to the deliberations of both the Curriculum Committee and the main faculty, was unclear as to what really happened in this regard.

"The student council proposal," he recalls, "was to substitute 357 for fifteen on the grounds that a working knowledge of computers is more valuable than the arithmetic of Stat 15." He says that he thought that this was what was adopted, but was not sure. "In any case," he continues "I have seen many applications of what I learned in Stat 15, it has been an invaluable tool. The computer course is also an important tool, but not necessarily more valuable..."

The President did admit that he was unclear as to the inclusion of Stat 357 in the course catalog.

Administration Silent On Open Enrollment

There is an official silence, on the part of the administration of Baruch, concerning the plans which are being formulated to accomodate the 600-650 extra students that will be admitted to the college this September under the Open Enrollment plan.

During a telephone conversation, President Weaver denied to release a copy of the report of the Committee on Open Enrollment, which contains the suggestions for plans and procedures for dealing with the Open Enrollment situation at Baruch, to The Ticker. His reasons were that the report only contained the committee's recommendations and not the final set of plans that faculty members might get upas if the contents of the report were prematurely released.

This same flimsy line of reasoning was used to deny The Ticker a copy of the report in which the suggested alternatives to college, which, as reported last week, had a very, very dubious future, were condemned.

"Even if it were, it wouldn't be enough (room)," President Weaver said, "even if it were, it wouldn't be enough (room)."

The question of elevator service is a very serious one. As of now, it can be said that our transportation between floors is a bad joke. However, while the elevators, which cannot handle the present student body, are delayed with as little as an increase in the student population as Open Enrollment will entail, it will cause a very bad situation.

Open Enrollment Plans for Baruch

Students will be much more additional library space (our present library isn't adequate for the present student body), space for the new faculty that will be hired, space for more guidance counselors, administrators, tutors, etc.

Ticker Interviews Dean Lavender

by Robert Barrett

The School of Liberal Arts in Baruch College is one year old. To mark this historic occasion the Ticker spoke with Dean Andrew Lavender.

Most of the students in Baruch College are concerned with one thing-the curriculum; or, to use a more exact term, "What do I have to take to get out of here?" Keeping this in mind, it was felt that the interview with Dean Lavender should be aimed at this point. Some Liberal Arts students are a bit confused as to their course of study.

According to the Dean, a proposal on a curriculum is under discussion. The curriculum committee has presented a four year plan to the full faculty and the proposal is being debated, discussed, revised and reconsidered, and will be a parallel curriculum will be offered at the next meeting early in March. As far as the present curriculum goes, Dean Lavender said, "Although the curriculum has begun to affect our small group of Liberal Arts students a certain amount flexibility, a certain number of options, it selection of courses, I could have hoped that in many instances the courses themselves, where possible and desirable, had been reorganized, reexamined and re-titled; approached with a continuous eye on the interest, and needs of a changing student body."

As well as her other organizational activities, Miss Marders is a member of the Junior League of Chicago. This organization, she says, "is my home when I'm away from home." A graduate of the University of Notre Dame in 1967, she majored in English. Her future plans include going to law school and possibly entering politics. She is an active member of the Young Democrats of Chicago and the Women's National Liberal Club.

Miss Marders and her family have been living in Boston for the past three years, and she will be teaching this spring in the Department of English at Boston University. 'I'm really glad to be back in Chicago,' she said. 'I think it's going to be exciting to teach here in Chicago again. I'm looking forward to seeing how the students have changed since I was a student at the University.'

The Seminar, sponsored by the Undergraduate Council on Urban Affairs, will be held in room 302 of the Student Center. The audience will consist of approximately 40 students. Food facilities will be available.

For further information about the Seminar, call the Office of Urban Affairs at 840-1890, or write to Miss Marders at the address below.

C - The student body will have to interpret logical deduction, because after all, students' rights are more than speculation. This tacit admission of the necessity of a students' council is an important one to remember.

Perhaps the administration is trying to show this, but, if they have any doubts, we can eliminate the artificial barrier between high school and college. And when the colleges are ready to upgrade the teaching and the facilities, we can break down the rigid instruction and assembly-line teaching. We want to attack the challenge of the educational and economic crisis that faces the country, and we want to help people to achieve the opportunity to offer not just a onetime program, but to provide a future.

We want to get to the point where the system is not only a part of the educational system, but also a part of the industrial system. We want to have the opportunity to develop the future of the students, and we want to have the opportunity to develop the future of the country.

We want to be faced with this crisis in an organized way. We want to have the opportunity to develop the future of the students, and we want to have the opportunity to develop the future of the country.

We want to be faced with this crisis in an organized way. We want to have the opportunity to develop the future of the students, and we want to have the opportunity to develop the future of the country.

We want to be faced with this crisis in an organized way. We want to have the opportunity to develop the future of the students, and we want to have the opportunity to develop the future of the country.
Withholding Information

There's no hiding a secret in the college, which is why some have been successful in their attempts to conceal the fact that this week's edition contains no editorial content. However, when these efforts are thwarted, the administration is required to reveal the truth, and this week, they have admitted that there were no students or faculty members available to write an editorial.

Statistics 357

There were no students or faculty members available this week to write an edition of The Ticker. As a result, the college has decided to focus on other activities, such as preparing for the upcoming basketball season and planning for the upcoming academic year.

Robbery

The administration has decided to take a break from their usual activities and focus on other matters, such as planning for the upcoming basketball season and preparing for the upcoming academic year. They have also decided to take a break from writing editorials and focus on other activities, such as planning for the upcoming basketball season and preparing for the upcoming academic year.

Faculty Nuts

As a result of the administration's decision to take a break from writing editorials, the faculty has decided to focus on other activities, such as planning for the upcoming basketball season and preparing for the upcoming academic year.

AROUND THE CAMPUS

Dear John,

I am once again writing you about the state of affairs at the University. I am writing you this letter because I am concerned about the current situation at the University and I believe that you, as the Editor-in-Chief, have a duty to address this issue.

The University is facing a number of challenges, including financial difficulties, faculty morale issues, and student dissatisfaction. These problems are affecting the University's ability to provide a quality education to its students.

I urge you to take action to address these issues and to work with the administration to find solutions. I believe that with your leadership, we can find a way to overcome these challenges and provide a better education for our students.

Sincerely,

Editor-in-Chief
Bowker Calls Open Admission Dynamic Says University Is A Recruiting Resource

The new generation of college students "depends by an economic and political structure apparently indifferent to outrageous social horizons for the sheer delight of acquiring new knowledge and keener taste," said Dr. James M. Bowker, assistant chancellor at City University of New York. "The inadequacies of the academic world up to its neglect of the crisis of the city as it was and is," he declared.

The application of advanced technology is "to strengthen the human component in education rather than replace it," he observed.

"Nothing has been happening for years," he said. "The pass/fail system has been real need of the times, the closed-circuit television system has been real need of the times, but we have not had the will or the courage to make these changes," he added.

Speaking of CUNY's open admissions plan, Bowker noted that the public institutions would respond to the crisis of the city as it was in the past. "The old methods of governance, the old academic pattern, and the old understanding of the public service are in the blood of our time."

Despite this, he said, "the old methods of governance, the old academic pattern, and the old understanding of the public service are still with us."

"We have to fight the battle against the old methods of governance," he said. "We have to fight the battle against the old academic pattern."
