The proposed plan for revising the academic calendar at Baruch, presented in this issue, has tremendous advantages for students which perhaps have not been sufficiently emphasized.

Under this plan, a student need not take more than 12 credits per session to graduate in four years. Those students who take larger program loads could conceivably graduate in three years, making it possible to complete baccalaureate and graduate studies in only four years. Regardless of the number of credits a student chooses to take, he can elect to attend any grouping of sessions he desires, enabling a student to work full time for a session and still complete a full year's academic work. With the exception of entering freshmen, a male student could still qualify for a 25 installment without attending the first session.

Last week Ticker conducted a survey of students in classrooms and the student center to see what the reaction to such a proposal would be. An overwhelming 90% of those questioned favored the proposal. No one expressed much fear of the imposition of the loss of vacation days. However, many of the same students felt that they would probably utilize one of the shorter one session to work full-time and therefore did not feel that the loss of vacation days would be of any major consequence.

At the moment it appears that the liberal arts faculty supports this measure, but there is some apprehension to it from the business faculty. They caution that this system would interfere with previous working commitments and that they would be subject to a number of impositions under the plan. To feel that this is not true is a matter of time until this system is implemented throughout the City University. Baruch should take advantage of the additional funds now available to it and adopt this proposal. The faculty members should, in the best interests of the entire school, make the necessary minor adjustments and support this measure which offers so much to the entire student body.

Hollerand Proposes New Academic Calendar

CUNY Students Plan Own Degree

When I first heard of the Wagner College plan, I found myself at the Board of Higher Education meeting in which the plan was originally introduced. At first I was a bit suspicious of the Wagner plan. My impression was that it would be a success in the College, as the plan was quite similar to the Wagner College plan. However, after further discussion with faculty members, I found myself to be quite impressed by the Wagner plan. The plan was well thought out and carefully developed. It was designed to meet the needs of the students and to provide them with a good education. The plan was also designed to be flexible, so that it could be adapted to the needs of individual students. The Wagner plan was a success in Wagner College, and it is a plan that I would recommend to other universities.

Possible 2696

This plan is unique in that it would give students the opportunity to design their own courses of study. The plan would allow students to design their own course of study at any time during their first year of college. They would be able to design their own course of study in any subject area they choose, and they would be able to take as many courses as they wanted. This would give students the opportunity to explore different subjects and to find out what they enjoy.

To the Editor:

Once again, a probable attempt to help Wagner College's family has been made. The Wagner family has always been vocal and active in their support of Wagner College. It is because of this support that Wagner College has been able to continue to thrive.

OPEN LETTER FROM YOUNG LORDS

Dear Comrade Dr. King, Comrade Chairman

This letter is a message from the Young Lords Party of New York. We are a movement of Puerto Rican and Chicano youth who are fed up with the way we are being treated in this society. We are the majority of this country, and our demands for justice must be heard.

In the past, we have been a force for change in this country. We have fought for the rights of Puerto Rican and Chicano people, and we continue to do so today. We are not afraid of the current administration, and we will continue to resist their policies.

We are writing this letter to inform you of our presence and our plans for the future. We are not going away, and we will continue to fight for our rights.

Sincerely,

This page is a fanzine, which generally means a collection of articles, comics, and art related to a specific topic, in this case, Superman.

In one of the articles, the fanzine discusses the character Superman and his origin story. The writer reflects on the appeal of Superman and the way he embodies the American dream, despite the fact that he is a hero who uses his strength and abilities to help others.

The fanzine also includes a comic strip, which features Superman and other characters from the DC universe. The comic strip is designed to be humorous and entertaining, with a focus on the adventures of Superman and his fellow superheroes.

The final section of the page includes a collection of advertisements for various Superman-related products, such as action figures, posters, and T-shirts. These ads are intended to capture the fan's interest and encourage them to purchase the products.
Beginning March 20th, you can do something useful with your empty beverage bottles and aluminum cans.

(And get paid for them too.)

妲九 element Company of New York announces the most far-reaching collection and recycling program ever undertaken.

Starting March 20th at seventeen of our bottling plants in the New York metropolitan area, we will reclaim for cash any beverage bottle or aluminum can.

Why we're doing this. The amount of refuse our communities are creating and disposing of has reached staggering proportions. We're running out of places to dump and incineration often pollutes the air.

What's worst - we're throwing away much that can be reused. But our sanitation departments aren't equipped to separate/recycle waste. Each individual will have to do that. And our city governments have enough to do without setting up recycling centers. Food stores can only collect, recondition bottles. The somebody has to do something about 3000 special bottling plants and aluminum cans. As Fes it since we were the largest bottling company in the area it was up to us to lead in this.

And quite honestly, it's up to you to help.

If you return your beverage bottle and can, you return them and bring them to our reclamation centers.

The idea works. And make no mistake about it, this is a good idea. The glass bottles are ultimately crushed and the glass reused. The aluminum is melted down to make new cans — helping to preserve our national resources.

We'll announce shortly which seventeen of our bottling plants will have reclamation facilities. And we hope that others in our field—or allied fields—will set up similar operations. Because hundreds of reclamation centers will ultimately be necessary. We'd like to see community groups organize and collect and reclaim bottles and cans. And we'd be happy to share our places with anyone who wishes to join in this important venture.

Beverage bottle and aluminum can only account for a small portion of our solid waste. But there are millions of dollars worth of bottles and cans being thrown away each year in our area. If we make a start here, if we all cooperate, we can do a lot for our community.

Beverage bottles and aluminum cans only account for a small percentage of our solid waste. But there are millions of dollars worth of bottles and cans being thrown away each year in our area. If we make a start here, if we all cooperate, we can do a lot for our community.

The whole idea of an MPAA is to have a self-regulation of the industry. It is a sound and logical necessity. It is not a way to avoid responsibility. It is a way to help the community. It is a way to help the community.
