Women's Lib Conference at Barnard

When Harvard University was founded in 1636, a significant number of young men were enrolled. But women? Not until 1871 did Harvard accept women students. And even then, they were allowed in as "auditors," till 1903. When Barnard was founded as a college for women, it accepted not only women, but men as well, till 1965, when Barnard became coeducational.

At Barnard, the college is not a "women's college," but a "college for women," if you will. And the students (male and female) are as interested in the programs of study as they are in the feminine aspirations of the college.

All classes are open to all students, and the men are as interested in the college programs as the women. There is a genuine freedom of thought and action at Barnard, and the students are encouraged to express their opinions, and to participate in all the activities of the college.

In brief, Barnard is a college for women, where education is the primary goal, and where both men and women are encouraged to participate in all the activities of the college. It is a college where the students are free to express their opinions, and where the college programs are open to all students, regardless of their sex.
Light Side-Dark Side

Fellow Baruchians, especially the students in the School of Business Administration, often wonder what is going on behind the walls of the Baruch College Library, which houses their favorite collection of books, periodicals, and other learning resources. To shed some light on this mysterious place, we've decided to present a series of articles that will give you a glimpse into the library's inner workings. In this issue, we feature a reflective piece by a student who has spent countless hours in the library, pondering the nature of knowledge and the role it plays in our lives.

AN EYE FOR AN EYE

It has been a common refrain in the past few years, often employed in discussions about the role of law enforcement and justice. When selecting a topic for this issue, we considered various perspectives on the issue and decided to explore the underlying assumptions and implications of this phrase.

COMMENTS

Sallen Elektron

Although the story that took place in the classroom two weeks ago was a tremendous event, it's important to remember that it was a single incident, not the norm. The students' actions were exceptional, and it's rare to see such a passionate display of knowledge and perseverance.

ADVICE OF THE WEEK: Search for opportunities to learn and grow. If you don't, you'll regret it.

LETTERS

Dear Editor: I was glad to see the article about the meeting of the Accounting Faculty at Baruch College. The room was jammed, and the discussion was lively and stimulating. It was evident that the faculty is dedicated to the improvement of the college and its programs. I hope that the students will take advantage of the opportunities to learn from their professors.

Dear Editor: I was pleased to see the article about the library and its efforts to provide a comfortable and inviting environment for students. It's important that the library continues to prioritize the needs of its patrons and make necessary improvements to ensure that all students have access to the resources they need. I look forward to seeing more updates on the library's progress.

Dear Editor: I would like to express my appreciation for the article about the library's efforts to support students with disabilities. It's important that all students have equal access to the resources and opportunities available at the library. I hope that the library continues to prioritize the needs of students with disabilities and makes the necessary accommodations to ensure that they have the same access to information and resources as other students.
ON THE RIGHT

Days are getting quite quickly for the barouchians, but the spring is still in the air with us. Therefore, we thought we should share our Baruch Spring with you.

The immediate impression is a change in the atmosphere of Baruch. The barouchians are more relaxed and enjoying the spring weather. The mood of the college is very pleasant.

THE ANNUAL
BERNARD M. BARUCH SILVER BENCH TROPHY

from the Athletics Department

Ever since I have written for the Baruch Bulletin I have been articles about the history of the Silver Bench. This year I was writing about the change in the atmosphere of Baruch. The mood of the college is very pleasant.

This year was much better, and it was my first experience with the Yankees. I have been attending games for several years, and I must say that this year was much better than the previous ones.

The students were much more relaxed and enjoying the spring weather. The mood of the college is very pleasant.
