Every summer the New York City Urban Corps, the nation's largest internship program, offers a chance for students to gain valuable hands-on experience in the community and in the city. The program is funded by the Federal government and is designed to provide practical experience in a variety of fields. The Baruch chapter of the Urban Corps has been in existence for six weeks. This year the chapter is participating in the Baruch College Spring Termship Program, which offers students the opportunity to work in a variety of internships, including those in the Federal government and other participating agencies. The program is divided into two parts: classroom knowledge and on-the-job experience. The chapter is currently working with a variety of agencies, including the Mayor's Office, the NYPD, and the Department of Health. The students are expected to complete the required coursework and to attend regular meetings to discuss the day-to-day activities of the program. The chapter is currently seeking new members to join the program. For more information, please contact the Urban Corps office at Baruch College.
