Chairwoman Linda Matula was knocked to the floor by former African Action Association (AAA) treasurer, Mr. Edward James, after a heated argument during the first Student Senate meeting this term, held on Tuesday, September 18, 1973. The assault marked the first violent act of this Student Government—a.k.a. known for loud, long meetings.

The agenda for the meeting consisted of three items: Annual Reports, the Elections '73 30 percent voter turn-out; unfinished business. The meeting started off schedule due to the tardiness of some Senators. The Chairwoman urged the Senators involved to complete and hand in Annual Reports. All Chairmen of Senate Standing Committees are to hand into the Chairman's office an annual report of that activities. Chairwoman Matula will coordinate the information into one large annual report. The purpose of this is to keep a flow of information going from one year to the next so that next year's government can be aware of all the activities that went on this year.

The next item discussed was the Student Government elections. A 30 percent voter turnout is necessary for the elections to be considered valid. Ms. Matula explained to the Senate the consequences if a 30 percent voter turnout is not accomplished. Ways by which a 30 percent vote could be secured were discussed. One of the most prominent methods discussed was the September 20th rally, where candidates would be introduced and an informal rap session would be held afterwards.

Mr. Ron Blomberg and Mr. Roy White of the Yankee would introduce the candidates, and a band would play between speeches. The congregation started to become tense at this point. A long argument then broke out over another method the elections committee was using: in conjunction with the Executive Board, to choose students to vote. An advertisement placed in TICKER was worked in a way which many of the people present thought was unethical. The advertisement linked the availability of Teacher Course Evaluations with voting in Student Government elections. The chairwoman explained to the body present the ad was worded as such to attract more students to vote; she also pointed out that the decision to print the ad was approved by a consensus of the Elections Committee. Arguments continued on that point after a member of the Elections Committee said no vote was taken at that meeting. When Ms. Matula stated that fact that a formal vote wasn't taken, but the General consensus of the group favored the ad placement. To speed up the process of the argument, however, no other student member of the Elections Committee was present. Ms. Matula offered to take full responsibility for placing the ad. This led to a heated debate between Ms. Matula and Mr. Edward James of the African Action Association. It was at this time that the disappearance of 3000 TICKERS was brought up. 3000 copies of TICKER had been removed earlier Tuesday from the TICKER bins (1st floor, 23rd St., Building) and picked up in the African Action Association office. Mr. James called the act a theft. Mr. Gerry Greenidge strongly objected to the label "theft." Mr. Greenidge pointed out that there is no sign anywhere stating that a student is permitted one copy of TICKER, anyone, according to Mr. Greenidge can take amount of copies. He concluded that any student who wished to take three thousand (3000) copies was legally allowed to do so. Ms. Jaysee Rosenberg of TICKER pledged with the members of African Action Association to return the copies of TICKER so that all students could get to read all of TICKER. The members present refused.

The difference of opinion ended up in a shouting match. Ms. Matula, yelling as she tried to regain some control over the meeting, started to give up. She left her seat at the head of the table, walked to where there was a large number of people within hearing distance, and tried to over-shout those students already making noise. She attempted to tell those listening about the new amendment concerning the School of Education, which will give students of that school equal representation on the Senate, while changing the number of Business and Liberal Arts Senators, yet no adding more numbers to the Senate. She shouted over to Mr. James, who was making noise, to "Shut up." An argument with Mr. James followed. She then went back to the interruption topic. The amendment, Mr. James went around to where Ms. Matula was standing, and the two engaged in a shouting match—Ms. Matula shouting on the amendment, and Mr. James shouting on Ms. Matula's shouting. Ms. Matula, unable to keep up with the level of shouting, yelled at Mr. James, once again to "shut up." Mr. James replied that she'd better apologize to him or he'd "show her how to shut up." Ms. Matula, after a short hesitation, responded, "Show me how to shut up." Mr. James then hit her, knocking her to the floor. Ms. Matula helped up the soda; remained in the room a few minutes until one of the staff members took her down to the medical office. Wrapped up ice was held to her jaw for an hour and a half while she, other students, and three Student Personnel Services members waited for some medical assistance. Neither the doctor or the nurse who are supposed to have been covering the office at night ever showed up. The Senate meeting ended. The people present did not hear the whole story about the amendment. As of Thursday afternoon, the effects of the meeting still lingered. Monday morning, Dean Sensen, Dean of Students, suspended Mr. James for two weeks, pending further action by a Disciplinary Committee.

On Tuesday of last week, members of the African Action Association were brought up. The members of TICKER pleaded with AAA members to return the TICKERS so that the 3000 students who had not received copies of the paper would have them. The club's members refused to do so, but said they would if signs retracting the ad were posted around the school. However, this could not be agreed upon, and the meeting broke up when Linda Matula, the chairwoman of Student Government was hit by Mr. Zandt, the chairman of AAA.

The next day, Wednesday, AAA was ordered by the office of the Dean of Students to return the TICKERS by 4 P.M. They again refused to comply unless signatures were posted throughout the college. As the deadline approached, AAA said it would return the papers with the ad ripped out. TICKER found this to be unacceptable, as the reverse side of the ad carried articles and other ads of interest to students.

The TICKERS were returned, with the ad torn out, and TICKER wishing students to see the entire paper, re-ran the issue with the voting of the ad in question. Thursday morning, the second version of the paper was on the stands.
Nobody Was There

On the night of September 18, 1973, between the hours of 4:00 a.m. and 6:00 a.m., students at Baruch College were involved in a wildcat strike against the administration, with sanctions including a week-long suspension of classes and the evacuation of the college. The strike was sparked by a decision to hold elections for the new charter of the college, with a vote on September 24 and the term of office for the new board to begin on September 25.

The Day Session Student Government Election Rally was held its 1973-1974 Election Rally on Thursday, September 26, in the Main Building auditorium between 12:00 and 2:00 P.M.

Following the list of speakers was Mr. Ollie, Oviedo, chairman of the Elections Committee, who welcomed us all to "Meet the candidates." He announced that the last candidates would not speak at the rally but would be available immediately afterward for a "rap session" in the North Lounge of the Student Center.

Dean Roy Senour followed Mr. Oviedo to the podium to commend the efforts of the Elections Committee and the three members of the faculty who were of particular assistance: Prof. Todd and Kovar of the English Department and Prof. Myers of the Speech Department.

Associate Dean Irving Greger, the next speaker, exhorted the audience to use its voice and to participate in the coming elections (Sept. 24, 25, and 26) by working as "not many people work towards something that they will have to work towards.

Following Ms. Manu were two special guests. Messrs. 'Skye White and Ron Blumberg of the New York Yankees. These two gentlemen introduced the candidates to the audience. In some instances mispronouncing their names but being greeted by hearty ovations in any case.

Ms. Linda Matula, incumbent Chairman of Day Session Student Government, cited the achievements of her administration as diagnostic testing for veterans, the highly successful Convocation, and the Publish or Perish Campaign. Ms. Matula stressed the need of a 30 percent voter turnout indicating the possibility that President Clyde Waxlerfield would not validate the elections (as he must do under the WBE bylaws) if the turnout fell below that mark.
