Baruch Needs Strong Public Relations Program

By Kony Hanff of PRS

The Baruch student newspaper feels that a major gap exists in the college's public relations efforts. As a result, many students are unaware of the college's activities and programs, even those directly related to their own lives. This gap can potentially lead to a lack of understanding among the student body about the college's objectives and goals. A strong public relations program would help bridge this gap and improve communications with the community.

March Against the Bankers

Protest Cutbacks

Our right to an education is under attack by the Board of Trustees. The Board of Trustees is considering plans by Chancellor Kibble and CONY President Marshak that would eliminate thousands of students and faculty, and maybe entire colleges. We are being asked to bear the burden of the NYU crisis by the bankers and politicians who run this city. WE SAY NO! WE DEMAND FULL FEDERAL AID FOR EDUCATION—OPEN ADMISSIONS AND SPECIAL PROGRAMS, FULL STATE AND LOCAL FUNDING FOR EDUCATION.

March On Washington Nov. 19

New York students and the University Student Senate (CUNY Students Organized) have initiated a MARCH ON WASHINGTON November 19. Students and others throughout the country, and especially in NYC, are aware that we are at a life-and-death struggle to defend the educational gains that we have won already. Those gains include educational access, financial aid, and the right to fully support our students. WE MUST DEMAND FULL FEDERAL AID FOR EDUCATION—OPEN ADMISSIONS AND SPECIAL PROGRAMS, FULL STATE AND LOCAL FUNDING FOR EDUCATION.

Baruch Feels CETA’s Impact

By Carol Tupper
The American economy is in a state of flux. Under the supervision of the Department of Labor and the CETA (Comprehensive Employment and Training Act), Baruch College is beginning to change. The training center is being designed for the transition of Baruch personnel from the job, as stepping stones to the world of work.

The Russians Are Coming

By Fred Annael

Baruch College has opened the doors to take the opportunity for students to be involved in the world of work. In the Soviet Union, the CETA (Comprehensive Employment and Training Act) has resulted in a pattern of tutoring for students. Many students believe that the tutoring is a means to an end. However, tutoring is a form of assistance which will help students to be prepared for the world of work.

Many of our readers have been aware of the fact that the TICKER has not appeared on the stands for a number of weeks. We thank our readers both students and faculty, for their continued support of Baruch's oldest and finest student publication. Our problems are not over yet.

As an editorial assignment, it is this week's edition's duty to present the reporter's call for the reinstatement of our publication. The reporter's call for the reinstatement of the student publication has been long overdue. Our publication has faced many challenges and obstacles in its journey to become a recognized and respected student publication. However, we are determined to overcome these challenges and continue to provide a platform for students to express their ideas and opinions.

In this edition, we present an article on the history of the TICKER and the challenges it has faced in its journey to become a recognized student publication. We highlight the contributions of past editors and the efforts of students to keep the publication alive. We also present an article on the current state of the publication and the need for its reinstatement.

We encourage our readers to support the publication by subscribing and sharing it with their friends and peers. We also welcome contributions from students who wish to contribute to the publication. Let's work together to make the TICKER a vibrant and respected student publication.

Athletes After 30

By Marty Berkowitz

The idea that a professional athlete has reached his prime at 30 is a myth. Geriatrics is a funny thing in sports. An athlete at the top of the world at 30, but can find his status in question years later when he reaches the age of 32. At this point his future is written in the doctors' orders to wonder if he has anything else. It's as if blowing out the candles on his 32nd birthday cake would produce in him an entirely new and weaker anatomy.

32 is a sample age here because it happens to be New York Jet's quarterback Joe Namath. A preseason football scriber of note wondered if at his age Namath would go down in the next season as a Jet. His passing statistics over the first four days as a Jet shows he has broken the record, Atlanta was using him in a part-time role, utilizing him to Milan at the end of the season. The Bro's had him at a part-time designated hitter this season. He played 12 games with a .287 avg.

Namath responded with a solid par season, giving rise to tireless talk from corners of the baseball media. It seems as if the Brewer front office is planning something. Namath and the same way the Cardinals dealt with Bob Gibson in 1975. Maybe the two can't perform as they used to, but considering the performance, it's making me wonder if the Cards down the stretch this season won't at least been given a fair chance to prove it.

In basketball, a far more rigorous sport than baseball, such a chance is given to the given to 40-year old Wilt Chamberlain. The snafu between the Los Angeles Lakers and New York Knicks over the rights to his services has been cleared up by Commissioner Lawrence O'Brien. He has fulfilled his obligations to the Lakers and is a free agent. Thus ends a two-month debate over whether or not the Lakers own him. It appears as if the Lakers are not going to do little to protect the decision.

Within a few days, Chamberlain, according to the Knocks, barring further complications from the A.B.A. which now claims his contract is bound by contract to the San Diego Conquistadors. Chamberlain was technically no longer in existence. Get it? The upshot of all this wrangling is that the Knicks are desperate to get Wilt, and eventually they probably will. Critics of the move are already asking an explanation for the fuss over a 40-year old man who has been out of the game for five years. To many sportswriters and other experts on the subject, there is no way Chamberlain can possibly help the Knicks, and to pay say the price would be a waste of money. This whole argument is part of the same old-age myth, wherein it is easy to forget that Wilt Chamberlain is still Wilt Chamberlain, merely because he is 40.

At his age, it is still the strongest man in the N.B.A. How is it that Wilt Chamberlain is still Wilt Chamberlain, merely because he is 40.

Tennis, Anyone?

By Doug Regiman

A recent Associated Press magazine called Tennis U.S.A. stated that tennis was "by far the fastest growing sport in America." Since I have been a tennis enthusiast for many years, this "revolution" did not come as a surprise, but only reinforced my faith in the American tennis player. The only question was to see America pass up a good thing. Of course, the health benefits, and other beneficial aspects can certainly be classified under this auspicious conclusion.

The question of why tennis has taken so long to catch on here in the United States, remains somewhat of a mystery. For although it has its origins in the Middle Ages, it was not until five years ago that the question of how much interest tennis generated could even be considered. As was at that time that information was gathered and statistics were made available. Some of the results are certainly staggering. As compared to the number of tennis players in 1973 (this figure includes those people who are consistent participants or at least once every 2 weeks), there are 40% more tennis players compared to 1974, there are 24% more tennis players. But the most impressive bit of information has been obtained that there are 19,400,000 tennis players in America these days.

In the years to come, according to a publication of "Sporting Goods Merchant," tennis will continue its growth in America. Of course, I add this with the qualifications that tennis is here to stay. This ubiquitous sport, that has found the way to its growth here in the United States, has become an integral part of our society.

The conclusion that can be drawn from all these statistics is that tennis is here to stay. This unique and exciting game has found its niche in the land of sports. An athlete can be on his prime at 30 is a myth. An athlete can be on his prime at any age. At 35, he might still be better than a man at 37 and a man at 40. Therefore, the emotional state of mind is an important question for consideration. Many sportswriters and others experts on the subject, there is no way Chamberlain can possibly help the Knicks, and to pay say the price would be a waste of money. This whole argument is part of the same old-age myth, wherein it is easy to forget that Wilt Chamberlain is still Wilt Chamberlain, merely because he is 40.

Get Your Body In Shape

By Bonnie Kloc

Summer has just passed and Fall is here. With Fall here and winter just around the corner, many people tend to become less active and less conscious of their physical appearance. After all, how often do you wear a bathing suit in December, unless, of course, you belong to a polar bear club?

Looking good in a bathing suit is a great reason for staying in shape, but feeling good in anything you wear is even a better reason for staying in good physical condition. With Winter coming, we are limited in the amount of exercise we get, and we all know that you can't burn off a Big Mac by watching a football game.

This Fall, the Physical and Health Education Department have made it possible for the students, faculty, and staff to utilize the following facilities: the gymnasium, the weight room, and the swimming pool.

All facilities are located in the 23rd Street Building. The gym, the weight room, and the swimming pool are open 12-2 pm Tuesday, 12-2 pm Wednesday, and 12-2 pm Thursday.

Thursday — 12-2 pm

Friday — 1-10 noon

Gym: Monday — 10-12 am & 3-3:40 pm

1-2 pm

Tuesday — 2-4 pm

Wednesday — 12-1 pm & 3-4 pm

Thursday — 12-2 pm & 7-7 pm

Thursday — 12-2 pm

Friday — 1-10 noon

Whether you want to build up or slim down, we have the facilities that can help you achieve your goal. Play basketball in the gym, work out in the weight room with the universal gym equipment, or go for a swim. Just think, if you get involved in regular exercise programs you might not have to go on a crash diet when bikini weather comes around.

For further information, contact Bonnie Kloc or Tom Cra- covia in Room 709 (23rd St. Bldg.). Keep watching for future announcements of intramurals or tournaments.
