Mashinini At Baruch

By EDWARD E. SCOTT, II

For weeks, posters throughout the college had announced his coming, now he had arrived. It was Thursday, December 9th, and after having just finished a television interview in the Oak Lounge for the ABC television network, he was sitting in the auditorium of the 23rd and Lexington Building, before a packed house of eager students, preparing to speak on a subject that was very close to his heart.

His name was Tsietsi Mashinini, he was the president of the Soweto Students' Representative Council. South Africa. He was also an eyewitness, participant, and organizer of the workers' stay-home strike which took place on June 17th, 1976.

He stood and walked slowly to the microphone. His expression was calm and alert. He seemed slightly distracted by the camera crew as they set up their equipment. He turned off the television camera lights. Before he ended his speech he turned to the audience and punctuated his speech with a cry of, "Power! Today is our day!"

A thunderous applause from the audience showed their approval and their unity with his cause. After the announcement, Mashinini began to take questions from the audience.

The first question asked was whether or not Mr. Mashinini believed black South Africans were ready to control their country. His reply, "When we get the power, we will know how to use it!"

The next question posed was, "How can we (Black Americans) help?"

"We would like to see the big multinational corporations that own South Africa. 84% of the land is held by blacks (approximately 96% of the population) and 16% of the land is held by whites (approximately 4% of the population). The freedom of blacks in South Africa is a political farce."

Mashinini was engaged in the American audience to send their support to Black South Africans and their cause. "I think there should be an investigation of the multinational corporations that support the policy of Apartheid in South Africa. Also, I think that we should boycott their products."

The audience showed their support of majority rule in South Africa by more than just verbal support; they contributed money to the cause. Mr. Mashinini also presented with a check for $400 from the Students of Baruch through the DSSG.

Phony Ring Debate Continues

President Chris Niles To Bring Suit

By ROBERT STEINBERG

Late Monday afternoon, Day Session Student Government President Chris Niles initiated procedures to take legal action against the Herff Jones Corporation. During the last few months, local representative John Faria has been selling college rings to undisciplined Baruchians who have been led to believe that Faria can offer them the same commodity at a substantially lower price.

Many students and members of the Senior Affairs Committee, like Mr. David Schultz, as well as concerned administrators like Dr. Ruth Frisz, Director of Student Activities, have repeatedly demanded that Mr. Faria cease in his usage of the college's name and stop advertising illegally on campus. Dr. Frisz has been in contact with both the corporate headquarters in Indianapolis and also with the company's regional director, Dr. LaPardo. LaPardo assured Frisz that if Mr. Faria was engaging in any irresponsible of illegal advertising techniques, he would put a stop to it. Aside from this remark, LaPardo seemed quite disinterested and rude. Little satisfaction, if any, is likely to result.

Chris Niles and DSSG Treasurer Errol Grannum have indicated that students are being ripped off by a company using unethical business practices and selling phony college rings as they would the "real McCoys."

"Finkelman expressed concern about the lack of transparency in the election process. He suggested that there should be more measures in place to ensure that the elections are fair and just." (Page 2)

Rodriguez Removes C.B.S. Signs

"Rodriguez stated firmly that he felt the students had the right to make their own decisions. However, he also acknowledged that there was a need for guidelines to be put in place to ensure that the students were acting responsibly." (Page 2)
Letters-to-the-editor

Dear Friends,

I write you today to communicate an opportunity to thank you for your cooperation and time in completing the Student Activities Research and Development Ticket questionnaire. The information is still in the process of being assembled and will be submitted to student activities, research, and development. We hope that in the future you will extend it further by continually sending your replies at Baruch College. Student Personnel Services, in essence, is here to make the transition from college toward the community. The service provided is the completion of your student record.

Thank you.

Phony Rings

A controversy has arisen over the rings currently being sold by Herff Jones, Inc. and the questionable methods used to market them. Dr. Frisz's Concerns

We again remind students that the only "Baruch College Rings" are Sold at the Baruch Book Store. The rings manufactured by Herff Jones and announced he will initiate legal action against Herff Companies for concern by only a very small percentage of all alternatives. According to surveys conducted by Sherry Caruso, 20 percent of the students would not wear the rings, 60 percent of Baruch students believe that Baruch is a working class institution, and 35 percent of the students believe that the rings are a symbol of elitism.

JYM at this party will honor the Baruch Student Senate was elected to the Eclusions Review Committee. It is quite clear that Herff Jones has no intentions of adhering to the regulations of the Student Activities Research and Development Ticket questionnaire, as they are solely interested in the sales of their products. It is for this reason that we are exercising our rights as students to mobilize efforts on College Rinnrs."

The rings are manufactured by Herff Jones and are sold at Baruch Book Store.

Dean of Students

We again remind students that the only "Baruch College Rings" are Sold at the Baruch Book Store. The rings manufactured by Herff Jones are listed as areas in which freshmen should prove of great value to students and staff members. We see a shrinking of the Baruch College community and a corresponding increase in the number of students who are not satisfied with the education they receive. The information is still in the process of being assembled and will be submitted to student activities, research, and development. We hope that in the future you will extend it further by continually sending your replies at Baruch College. The violence led with a series of gun battles, and police orders were reinforced by the use of tear-gas cannisters on the streets. Assemblies Act — forbidding gatherings of more than 50 people — was invoked by police to control the situation. The police began a search for the organizers behind the demonstrations. James Kruger invoked a section of the country's Riotous Assemblies Act, which riotous and unlawful meetings should be suppressed with the use of force.
C.U.N.Y. In Recruitment Drive

By JIM MERRICK

The City University system is going on an all-out recruitment drive to interest prospective students. Each of the colleges within the system has a dean of admissions and their task is to find students who meet the requirements of the college and will best be served by its curriculum.

The reason for this all-out campaign is due to the fact that many of the students entering the colleges will be seniors next fall. The college is trying to catch them during the summer months, when they are most receptive to enrollment information.

The most promising candidates are those who are interested in the various programs offered by the college. The college is trying to identify these students by running advertisements in newspapers and other media.

Closer Look At Interpol

By LIZ PARDO

To see the name Interpol on a marquee in Times Square is not a normal sight. However, the film "Interpol," a movie that focuses on the work of the international criminal organization, is currently being screened at local theaters.

The movie, directed by Irwin Winkler, tells the story of the international police agency known as Interpol. It follows the agency's attempts to catch a notorious criminal who has been eluding law enforcement for years.

The film's cast includes Marlon Brando, who plays the head of Interpol, and Dustin Hoffman, who plays the criminal. The film also stars Jane Fonda and Al Pacino.

The movie is a web of international intrigue as the organization attempts to catch the criminal, who is known as "The Shadow." The story unfolds across various countries, with each country playing a role in the organization's efforts to capture the criminal.

The movie is a thrilling ride, with many action sequences and suspenseful moments. The performances of the cast are excellent, particularly Brando, who delivers a powerful performance as the head of Interpol.

"Charlie Brown" A Smash!

By DANNY LEWIS

Of all the comic strips that have become popular in recent years, none have been more successful than "Peanuts." The comic strip, created by Charles M. Schulz, features the adventures of a group of children, including Charlie Brown, Linus, and Snoopy.

The strip has been a great success, with millions of people reading it every day. The strip has also been adapted into a successful television series and a variety of other forms of media.

The success of the strip has been due to its appeal to people of all ages. The strip's characters are relatable and the situations are often humorous. The strip's message is one of hope and optimism, which is especially appealing to children.

The strip's popularity has also helped to increase interest in other forms of media, such as books and movies, that are based on the strip. These works have been successful and have helped to further increase the strip's popularity.

The strip's success has also helped to increase the popularity of the comic strip format in general. Other comic strips that have been adapted into successful television series and movies have been based on the strip's popularity.

The strip's success has also helped to bring new life to the comic strip format. The strip has been successful in reaching a new generation of readers, and has helped to increase interest in other forms of media that are based on the strip.

When I asked students why czars were determined to make this club successful and grow in popularity, they said, "The Italian culture is very unique and offers a lot of opportunities," and "We want to share our traditions and heritage with others." Many students mentioned that they were interested in meeting new people and learning more about Italian customs.

Student Grandes sent an e-mail expressing their excitement about the club's potential and the positive impact it could have on the campus community. The faculty advisor was also enthusiastic about the club's growth and the opportunities it presents for students to explore their cultural identity and make meaningful connections with others.

The club's goals are to promote Italian language and culture, organize events and activities that reflect Italian traditions, and provide a platform for students to express their cultural pride. The club is open to all students interested in Italian culture and language, and welcomes new members to join and contribute to its success.

STEVE ROLLING...the artist. Not only is he the frontman of the cult rock band...he is also a singer. His music is full of complex themes and powerful melodies that reflect his personal experiences and social observations. His voice is rich and expressive, and his stage presence is captivating. His performances are a testament to his talent and dedication to his craft.

The album ends rather abruptly, with a light-hearted song that doesn't quite fit the overall mood of the album. However, it is still enjoyable and adds a nice touch to the collection.

Statesmen Outhustled By South Conn., 76-67

By CHARLES ROTHMAN

It was a quiet bus ride home. Sandy Lanham sat alone, sitting on the front seat, daydreaming about the upcoming game. Ken Trush and Tom Marrano whispered to each other, Joe Hochberg, the favorite of many, read about the New York Times and the latest in sports. Ken Trush and Dom Marranoro whispered to each other about the CUNY Conference basketball teams. Steve Postier slept, and up front,isolated from the rest of the team, was the young Floridian, Jimmy Barrett.

Baruch’s hoopsters had just played their worst game of their young season, absorbing an unexpected—but totally deserved—loss. The Statesmen, despite their many mistakes, still found the victory at Madison Square Garden. Baruch had just been outplayed by the Statesmen, as coach Jackson instructed his players to run the offense, and worse, play defense. He had just watched as Jimmy Barrett, a role model for the young team, took over the game. The shakiness resulted in 15 first-half turnovers, most of which occurred on fast breaks from sure, easy passes. Harvey Offman, who has vaulted into the role of third guard by moving the ball well, explained how the lack of togetherness begat errors. “I didn’t know what Sandy (Lanham) was going to do on one 2 on 2 break,” said Offman. “I was going to cut to the basket, but instead he stopped, and my man was already in the hands of his defender.”

Yet, in spite of their lapses and mishaps, the Binghamton team was virtually presented victory for the third and fourth nights at the court, an inability which allowed the Statesmen to escape with the win. But in a twelve-minute stretch in the second half, with the game up for grabs, Baruch canned only 5 of 22 shots, allowing a shaky eight-point deficit to become an insurmountable seventeen point bulge.

Daryl Breland, SCBC’s 6’4” freshman forward, was instrumental in closing out the remaining seven players, hitting several open layups resulting from pretty passes by Sandy Lanham and twelve assists — and Tony Gardner, plus controlling the defensive backcourt from the too-late-arrived Baruchians. Breland’s strong effort accounted for three key rebounds, many of which stopped Baruch from mounting any comeback drive via following missed shots with offensive rebounds and baskets.

Ford remained optimistic that the offense which has hibernated for four games will emerge with a vengeance soon. “Harvey’s installed a good offense here, and if the guards will set up to run the plays, hit the open man, we’ll be putting the numbers on the scoreboard,” Ford said.
