STUDENT GOVERNMENT APPOINTS NEW COUNCIL MEMBERS

By ANDREA F. BENT

The Day Session Student Government, under the provisions of its new constitution, was able to fill five vacancies in the student council without holding an election. The five new members, Michael Inselbuch, Ed Mills, Tom Faherty, Linda Gioia, and Amir Abbaei were voted into council on Sept. 25 and, according to Pauline Jennett, the chairperson, "it all went very well."

Michael Robinson, DSSG vice president called the old constitution "redundant and verbose." It was amended and the new version was approved in last May's Student Government referendum. According to Robinson, the old constitution did not make adequate provision for vacancies left in the student council by members resigning for personal and other reasons during the semester.

"We had ten vacancies last semester and it cost too much to replace them," said Robinson. "Each time someone resigns, it could cost $6,000 - $9,000 to launch a major election to fill the vacancy under the old constitution." He said that the new constitution allows the student government to fill vacancies quickly and effectively.

The five vacancies, four seats in upper council and one in lower, were filled by four students respondent specifically to the advertisement placed in The Ticker by the student government. Robinson said that two seats were vacated when council members Cheryl Nelson and Willard Taitt were forced to resign by the dean's office because their grade point average fell below 2.5, an average that any student holding government office is required to maintain. He said that the third seat was left unfilled from the May referendum, and that another council member resigned for personal reasons this semester.

Linda Gioia, lower council member decided to join the council because she "was very active in student government in high school and I feel I can do something for Baruch."

Ed Mills, upper council member said, "The experience will benefit both the student government and myself. It could teach me a thing or two."

According to Jennett, the twelve students who showed up for the advertised positions had to campaign before the council during club hours on Sept. 17 to demonstrate why they wanted to be council members. Jennett said that the council made notes on the individuals, and the students were told to return the following Thursday during club hours to hear how the council voted. She added that the votes were cast by ballots, and that other candidates who did not make the council would serve on a committee.

Gioia said, "Everyone at Baruch is interested in their own lives, not in extra curricular activities. I think I can do something to change that."

PROBLEMS PLAGUE WBMB

By CATILIN MOLLISON

WBMB, Baruch College's radio station, began broadcasting for the fall semester on Sept. 29, after experiencing technical problems, according to Craig Lopez, the station's general manager. "We went about a week over what we usually do," said Lopez. According to Lopez, the station's staff members must do all repair work themselves. He said that this was very difficult a great deal of time was required and it took all summer to accomplish.

"We did a lot of renovations over the summer, and at the beginning of the semester," he stated. "We had to do some re-wiring, checking speakers, taking out, and adding a few. The speakers are on the ceiling, and we had to do our own electrical work."
The Freshman Orientation Program has become a political football resulting in Baruch students being kicked around...

Most of the issues of the program can be traced to the selection process and the people involved, who are some of the most concerned faculty members, who have a lot of compassion for their students and their programs. However, there is a lack of responsibility and understanding about the situation.

The Freshman Orientation Program is more than a mere program of orientation; it is part of the curriculum. The program should be evaluated and improved, not just canceled. The students who are involved in the program have had their rights and responsibilities taken away without due process. This is not fair to the students or the faculty members who work with them.

The Freshman Orientation Program is a program that prepares students for their academic and social lives at Baruch College. It is a program that fosters a sense of belonging and community. It is a program that helps students transition into college life.

To Buy American or Not to Buy American

By JOHN C. HAUGH

Fashions of advertisements fascinate me. I often cannot control my curiosity when I carry a few other advertise displays open my jacket with labels这样的广告词。This advertisement was not trying to sell a product or even trying to sell a particular company, but rather it was to advertise a country.

It is a truth (though not necessarily so) that we will put it pocket. If we are the students of today, going to become leaders of tomorrow, we have a responsibility to ourselves, our family, our country to stand up as students, to face the nation of our forefathers and to give this country back on its feet.

I first heard of this advertisement during the recent view of one particular advertisement. This advertisement was not trying to sell a product, but rather it was trying to sell a particular country. It was that label; the words that were on the inside of my jacket. It was that label that cost me $50.

I was in the middle of the store not knowing what to do. Should I buy the jacket made in Hong Kong, or should I pay double for the jacket with that label and feeling of patriotism? I did what was the campus student assembly would do in that position, I bought the cheaper jacket.

So off I went in the midst of the store with the thought of the face of the country. I know, I know, you must be thinking, "You bitch, you wear clothing, I was also investing in clothing, I was also investing in a piece of clothing, we all have one thing in common. We all want to spend as little as possible."

However, this feeling of euphoria very soon came to crashing halt. When I entered the store, I was not surprised to see the coat racks filled with clothes. However, when I looked at the price it was also shocking. Upon looking at the price I was also investing in a piece of clothing, my mind went on my little shopping spree with the words 'Made in the U.S.A."

When I turned the channel, I did what a lot of us would do in that position, I bought the cheaper jacket. And I know what you are thinking, "You fool, you did it again."

Now that fall is upon us, I am everyone else, are going out shopping for cloths. Even though all have different tastes in clothing, we all have one thing in common. We all want to spend as little as possible.

I was caught my eye was a tweed jacket. Upon looking at the price I was also investing in a piece of clothing, I felt2. When I looked at the price I was also investing in a piece of clothing, I believe in my heart and in my mind that if I did not sell my country short by purchasing an item made overseas.

It is plain and simple, it is cheaper to produce clothes, and when you could buy a $50 coat for half the price. I believe that it is this feeling of patriotism that will determine what sort of world our children are going to live in. Who knows, the guy next to you in your political science class might someday be our president, or that the person that are in high positions put this country back on its feet.

I believe in my heart and in my mind that I did not sell my country short by purchasing an item made overseas.

CITY UNIVERSITY OF NEW YORK

AIDS

The City University of New York is committing $2 million to fight AIDS in the fall of 1986. This commitment is the largest single financial commitment by the City University of New York to date.

The money will be used to fund research, prevention, and education programs related to AIDS. Funds will also be used to support AIDS-related programs throughout the City University of New York system.

This commitment is part of the City University of New York’s ongoing effort to combat the AIDS epidemic. The City University of New York has already taken a number of steps to address the issue of AIDS, including the creation of an AIDS Task Force and the development of an AIDS education program.

The City University of New York is committed to doing its part to fight AIDS. The university is working closely with other organizations and agencies to ensure that the best possible care and resources are available to those affected by AIDS.

This commitment is a testament to the City University of New York’s commitment to fighting AIDS and its dedication to the well-being of its students and employees.

According to Leibowitz, “We are taking a leadership role in addressing the issue of AIDS. Our commitment demonstrates our commitment to doing our part to combat this growing problem.”

The City University of New York is proud to be a leader in the fight against AIDS.

Getting Ready for On-Campus Recruitment

Kick-Off, Monday, October 20

Day One: Practice your smile.
A pleasant face gets interviews off to a good start. Show enthusiasm; speak slowly, clearly. Squeeze tennis balls to firm up your handshake.

Day Two: Assemble your assets.
Identify your academic strengths. Examine your job experiences, big and small, and analyze how they make you unique and desirable to employers.

Day Three: Get the names of the recruiters.
Research the companies whose interviewers you will meet. Know their products or services, P & L and balance sheet numbers, and operations. Look in books, ask teachers, check the Career Resource Library (Room 1710, 46 East 26).

Day Four: Dress for success.
Press your blue or gray suit; wear a matching muted tie or scarf; shine your shoes; have your hair done. Wear a watch. Wear dark socks.

Day Five: Relax.

Remember: you have the resources of the Career Planning and Placement staff behind you. Call us. We want to help.
